W. P. 4

PREFACE

In the following work the object everywhere kept in view has been to present the person of Socrates so clearly that the student may not fail to see what manner of man he was and why his influence was so decided upon his own time and upon succeeding ages.

To this end a part of the narrative portion of the Phaedo has been added to the Apology and Crito (so often given together without that addition) in order that the story may not lack its climax and catastrophe. The account of how nobly Socrates bore himself in his trial and under temptation to escape from prison needs to be supplemented by the picture of the serenity and courage with which he drank the fatal hemlock, that so the fair capital may be placed upon the stately column and the moral scope and splendor of the man be fully exhibited. The wrong which is done to the Phaedo in so mutilating it is more than atoned for by what is thus added to our view of the character of Socrates.

In the Dialogues contained in this volume the moral qualities of Socrates appear in their highest manifestation, as also some hint is given of his intellectual method; but the man is exhibited here at the great crisis of his experience, and but for a short time, so that we see only vaguely what the main work of his life was and still less clearly what was the intellectual process by virtue of which he made an epoch in philosophy. In the Introduction the attempt is made to state briefly what his life was devoted to doing, and what it was in his conversation which was intellectually so important and influential.

The outline of the argument prefixed to the notes on each chapter is intended chiefly as a suggestion that it is of the first importance that the student be led to search out and express clearly for himself the play and progress of the thought as it develops.

4 PREFACE

The dramatic form which Plato has given to his report of these conversations has been indicated by notes at the proper points. The form is very likely more regular and artistic than that actually employed by Socrates, but it has preserved for us the vital fact that skillful conversation was the method by which the great master brought himself to bear both intellectually and morally upon his followers. It has seemed worth while also in this way to emphasize the exquisite literary form in which the poet-philosopher has preserved to us these discourses.

The text is based upon that of Wohlrab in his revision of Hermann, as given in the Teubner text edition, of which the first volume is dated 1886; but the punctuation has been changed, especially in the removing of many commas before relatives and interrogative and declarative particles, and in a different use of quotation marks. Where the text has been otherwise altered, attention has been called to the fact in the Appendix.

The commentary has drawn freely from many sources, but is most largely indebted to Cron, while the general estimate of Socrates has been influenced more by Zeller than by any other authority.

The editor cannot sufficiently express his obligation to the friends and associates who have encouraged and generously aided him in this work. He especially desires to acknowledge the very valuable corrections and suggestions which Prof. M. W. Humphreys has kindly allowed him to make use of.

INTRODUCTION

PLATO

- 1. Life of Plato. Plato, the son of Aristo and Perictione, was born in Athens, probably in May, 427 B.C.1 He was of noble descent. Codrus, the last king of Athens, being claimed as an ancestor on his father's side, while his mother was of the family of Solon. About the age of twenty he became a disciple of Socrates. Before that time he is said to have devoted himself to athletics and poetry, and to have composed a complete dramatic tetralogy, which he was intending to bring out but committed to the flames when he met with Socrates and had his attention diverted to the field of philosophy. Plato took no active part in public affairs. If he had any such ambition circumstances were not favorable. His voice was thin, the name of his relative Critias. one of the Thirty Tyrants, was abhorred, and the condemnation of Socrates by the ruling democracy had filled him with grief and indignation. He determined, therefore, to devote his life to thought and teaching. After the tragic death of his master in 399 B.C., Plato, for the time embittered against Athens, went
- century of our era), III. 2, cites Apollodorus (who died 129 B.C.) as saying that Plato was born Ol. 88, on the 7th of Thargelion = 427, May 29th (in that year, it is computed). This coincides (being Vol. 9 of Platons Sämmtliche with what Diogenes Laertius also tells Werke übersetzt von H. Müller), pp. us, III. 6, that Hermodorus, a pupil of 32-65 and 234-238, and Zeller's Plato Plato, says that Plato was twenty-eight and the Older Academy (Eng. Trans. years old when, after the death of of 1876), chap. I., note 2.

<sup>1</sup> Diogenes Laertius (in the third | Socrates in 399, he went to Megara. In Diog. Laert. III. 2, Hermippus (200 B.C.) is cited as saving that Plato died in Ol. 108, I = 348-347, eighty-one years of age. See Steinhart's Platos Leben to Megara, and thence to Egypt, perhaps by way of Cyrene. Later, probably after a sojourn in Athens, we find him in Italy and in Sicily, where he incurred the displeasure of the elder Dionysius, by whose direction it is said Plato was sold as a slave in Aegina. Ransomed by a friend, he returned to Athens about 387 B.C., and began to teach philosophy in the Academy, a gymnasium in the northern suburb of the city. Twenty years later, in 368 B.C., at the instance of Dion, his friend and the brother-in-law of the elder Dionysius, Plato visited Sicily a second time, hoping to win over the younger Dionysius to philosophy and his political beliefs, in which, however, he was disappointed. In 361 B.C. Plato made a third unavailing journey to Syracuse in the interest of Dion, whom Dionysius had banished and deprived of his property. After this he devoted himself exclusively to philosophy and teaching until he died, in 347 B.C., in his eighty-first year. Among his pupils were Aristotle and Phocion.

2. Writings. — All the writings of Plato known to antiquity, thirty-six in number, if the Epistles are reckoned as one, have been preserved to us. In them we see how profoundly he had been influenced by his master. All of his compositions except the Epistles are in dialogue form, as Socrates taught, and in all of the Dialogues except the Laws Socrates leads the conversation. Plato's object at first was to reproduce the personality and continue the method of his great master. While we cannot know positively, the opinion seems to prevail that he composed none of his Dialogues while Socrates was still living. The Apology, it is generally agreed, must have been written immediately after the trial, — the Crito after a longer interval. The Phaedo is referred to a later period, when the ideas peculiar to Plato had become developed.

<sup>1</sup> The seventh of Plato's Epistles, in | learned the facts, perhaps from Speusipwhich the journeys to Syracuse are re- pus, the nephew of Plato, who accomcounted, though probably not genuine, panied him on his third journey to Sicily. was doubtless written by one who had See Steinhart's Platos Leben, p. 12.

3. Literary Form. — The form of Plato's works is dramatic. They are not only dialogues (some direct, in the very words of the speakers, like the Crito, others narrated, like the Phaedo),1 but they are, many of them, constructed throughout on the lines of trage ly which Aristotle prescribes.<sup>2</sup> After a prologue introducing the characters and the beginning of the action, which is a discussion (not a mythic plot as in tragedy), we have several members or parts of the dialogue, corresponding to the ἐπεισόδια in a Greek play, in which a complication (δέσις) and unravelling (λύσις) are developed. These members are sometimes separated, and often enlivened, by traces of something like the dramatic chorus, the whole ending with a distinct epilogue.3 This dramatic quality is the natural result of Socrates' dialectic method, with which Plato had been greatly impressed, of the dramatic spirit with which, owing to the plays of the great dramatists, the Athenian people at this time were saturated, and of the poetic and literary endowment of Plato himself. The problem Plato had to solve was to unite the dramatic with the argumentative in the development of his theses, giving rise thus to what may be called the dialectic or argumentative drama.

Aristophanes of Byzantium (200 B.C.), the grammarian and critic of Alexandria, because of the dramatic form of the Dialogues. arranged some of them in trilogies, as if they were really tragedies. Later, in the first century of our era, Thrasyllus, the traveling companion of Augustus and the tutor of Tiberius, divided all the Dialogues into tetralogies, grouping together about the closing scenes of Socrates' life the Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, and Phaedo.4

influence of his master, we have given to us with substantial accuracy the person of Socrates, his method, and his teaching; even in the dramatic portions of the Phaedo, although this Dialogue was written later, the spirit and character of Socrates are still portrayed vividly. This is what we should naturally expect. especially in the Apology. Immediately after Socrates' death loyalty to his memory would have forbidden Plato to offer anything but a correct representation of him to the many surviving admirers and pupils.1 This presumption is sustained by the Memorabilia of Xenophon, in which we have substantially the same Socrates as in the earlier dialogues of Plato.2 The difference between the two representations arises from the fact that Xenophon, being a practical man and no philosopher, did not appreciate or report the more ideal and philosophic sides of his master, as Plato did. Just so in the synoptic gospels we have pretty exact and literal reports of the deeds and words of Jesus, while their profounder significance is only indicated. In the gospel of John, however, while we have essentially the same Jesus both in person and in teaching as in Matthew, Mark, and Luke, the spirit and the significance of the Master's life and doctrine are developed much more profoundly. To arrive, through Plato and Xenophon, at what Socrates really was, we have no better criterion than Schleiermacher's two questions: What may Socrates have been in addition to what Xenophon reports without gainsaying the character and maxims which Xenophon distinctly assigns him? and, What must Socrates have been to call for and to justify such a description of him as is given in the Dialogues of Plato?3

As the years went on after the death of Socrates, although Plato's experience widened and his ideas developed, nevertheless he retained the intellectual method and the conversational form which his master had used, and so, perhaps, justified to his own mind his representing Socrates as the chief speaker in nearly all that he wrote.

We are led thus to inquire as to the person, work, and results of the work of Socrates.

SOCRATES

HIS PERSON AND TRAITS

5. Life of Socrates. — Socrates, son of a sculptor Sophroniscus and a midwife Phaenarete, was born at Athens not later than 469 B.C., — perhaps a year or two earlier. The son followed for a while the occupation of his father, and Pausanias says that in his time, the second century of our era, a group of the Graces, supposed to be the work of Socrates, was still to be seen at the entrance to the Acropolis. His wife Xanthippe,2 whom he probably did not marry until he was about fifty years old,3 was of a violent temper, which has become proverbial. By her he had three sons.4 The incidents in his life as known to us were few. He served as a hoplite at Potidaea, 432 B.C., and, in the Peloponnesian war, at Delium, 424 B.C., and Amphipolis, 422 B.C.<sup>5</sup> In 406 B.C. he was a member of the Senate. Early in 399 B.C., he certained from Diog. Laert. II. 44, who (Apol. 17 D, and Crito, 52 E), so that cites Apollodorus as saying that he he was born not later than 469 B.C., died Ol. 95, I=399. The time of the or, if  $\pi \lambda \epsilon l \omega \epsilon \beta \delta \delta \rho \mu \eta \kappa \delta \nu \tau \alpha$  be read in trial was, probably, at the end of the Apol. 17 D, we should have to go month Anthesterion (February, nearly), back a year or two earlier. See Zelor the beginning of Elaphebolion ler's Socrates and the Socratic Schools, (March, nearly), rather than in the second half of the month Thargelion Rhein. Mus. XXXI. (1876), pp. 1-54. (May, nearly), as some compute. The Delian festival seems to have been held at the end of winter. See C. Robert in Hermes, XXI. pp. 161 ff. Socrates was executed thirty days later (Xen. Mem. IV. 8, 2). At was condemned to death by a jury of his fellow-citizens, and a month later drank the poison hemlock and died.<sup>1</sup>

- 6. Personal Appearance. His personal appearance was not pleasing. In Xenophon's Symposium,<sup>2</sup> facetiously contending with the beautiful youth Critobulus as to personal charms, Socrates admits that his eyes project like a crab's, his nostrils are upturned like an ape's, and his lips are thick, but he claims that there is a practical advantage in each of these features. In the Theaetetus<sup>3</sup> his snub nose and prominent eyes are again referred to; while in Plato's Symposium<sup>4</sup> Alcibiades is made to say that Socrates has a face like Marsyas the satyr, and again that he resembles the ugly carved figures of Silenus.
- 7. Early Training. Like other Athenian youth, Socrates was early instructed in literature  $(\mu ov \sigma \iota \kappa \acute{\eta})$  and gymnastics, but his eager and active mind went on continually to make acquisitions from all sources.

It was a liberal education to live in the Athens of his day. He was born when the Confederacy of Delos was not yet a decade old, and his growth was coincident with the growth of the Athenian empire. Simonides did not die till after Socrates was born, while Pindar was living till he was nearly thirty. Of the great tragic poets, Aeschylus produced his Orestean trilogy when Socrates was about twelve; Sophocles and Euripides were his contemporaries. He listened all his life to the competitions of these and many other great dramatists in the Dionysiac contests, and doubtless heard himself caricatured in the Clouds, the comedy of Aristophanes. The age of Pericles (460-430) falls into the very middle of his life. He must have watched the building of the long walls from Athens to the Piraeus; he may have practiced his art in the workshop of Phidias; he saw the Parthenon arise under the direction of Ictinus. Herodotus and Thucydides produced their immortal histories in his manhood and old age. He had intercourse with the great sophists Protagoras, Gorgias, and others, with whom it would appear he often tried conclusions. It was in constant contact with such prominent and gifted men that Socrates developed.

8. Mental Characteristics. — But his mind was too vigorous and independent to be entirely shaped by its surroundings. It remained always unique. One trait of it was its great activity. Knowledge was the fundamental thing with Socrates, because in his view the virtues were essentially forms of knowledge, and for more knowledge he was continually seeking; the quest for it he unites with his great mission of testing men in obedience to the oracle of the god.<sup>1</sup>

Another trait of his mind was concentration. This is illustrated by the story Alcibiades tells of him in the Symposium.<sup>2</sup> On the expedition to Potidaea, one morning he fell to thinking about some problem he could not solve, and he would not give up, but stood fixed in thought all that day and the following night until the sun rose next morning, when he went his way.

One other mental characteristic was practical common sense. However exalted his conclusions at last may be, they all start from the most simple and commonplace beginnings. His discourses at first sight appeared ridiculous or rude, treating, as they often did, of "beasts of burden, smiths, tailors, and tanners—always repeating the same thing in the same words." But this habit was practically most valuable. It was the basis of that logical induction which Socrates was the first to employ, by virtue of which he must be regarded as the originator of the scientific method. This same common sense lies also at the root of the humor and the irony which abounded in his conversation and made it so effective.

9. Moral Traits. — But though his body and mind were not conventionally elegant they were robust and healthy, and his moral nature had perfect control of them. His powers of endurance were wonderful. In military service he withstood fatigue and hardships, was indifferent to heat and cold, and went barefoot in all seasons, even in the winter campaign in Thrace.<sup>1</sup>

He practiced temperance and self-denial to an extraordinary degree. "To want nothing," he said, "is divine." His clothing was homely, and the same in winter as in summer. His diet was simple, yet he was no ascetic; at a banquet with friends, he was the life of the feast, and could drink more wine without intoxication than any of his companions. In like manner, though genial and attached to his friends, he was superior to the temptations of lust in what would seem at that time to have been its most insidious form, as is shown by his ignoring the solicitations of Alcibiades.

His physical courage was remarkable. When Alcibiades was wounded in the fight at Potidaea, Socrates would not leave him, but rescued him and his arms, and deserved the prize of valor offered by the generals, but insisted it should be given to Alcibiades. At Delium, in the flight of the army, he walked off as coolly as though in the streets of Athens, and by his presence of mind and intrepidity saved himself and his companion.<sup>4</sup>

But his moral courage was quite as marked as his physical. The ridicule and obloquy of his fellow-citizens did not make him flinch, even when they culminated in threats and indictment. After the battle of Arginusae (406 B.C.) he refused to accede to the proposal that the fate of the eight surviving generals should be decided by a single vote of the ecclesia, although orators and populace cried out against him, and threatened him with imprisonment. Neither would he obey the command of the Thirty Tyrants, in their reign of terror, to go and bring their victim Leon from Salamis, though he refused at the peril of his life.<sup>5</sup>

one step from the path of duty, nor do an ignoble deed to please his judges, although by yielding even a little probably he could have saved his life.

10. Religious Belief. — In his religious convictions, Socrates was partly the child of the age in which he lived and partly superior to it. He acknowledged and worshiped the gods in which the city believed.3 He offered prayer to the sun,4 the greater part of his life was spent in obedience, as he claimed, to the order of Apollo in the oracular response given to Chaerephon at Delphi; and in the very moment of death he bids his friends sacrifice a cock to Aesculapius 6 in token that at length all is well with him. He believed in supernatural intervention as did most Athenians of his time. Prominent among such interventions which he himself experienced was his Δαιμόνιον.<sup>7</sup> ascribed to a divine source that voice which from childhood came to him, frequently preventing him from doing what he was about to do, but never urging him on.8 This was not the voice, as we term it, of conscience. That voice, also, Socrates heard and obeyed, and it often prevented him from certain courses of action, as, for instance, from consenting to the illegal trial of the generals of the battle of Arginusae, or from going to bring Leon from Salamis,9 or from escaping from prison at the instigation of Crito. But this voice of conscience he did not call  $\theta \epsilon \hat{i} \hat{o} \nu$ τι καὶ δαιμόνιον. The monitions of the divine voice, unlike conscience, referred only to future actions, and did not approve or condemn the past; they regarded exclusively the consequences of actions and not their moral quality; 11 and they were given only in cases where his unaided natural judgment seemed unable to decide. It was because, under doubtful circumstances, he could not himself see what course to pursue that a clear intimation coming to him, as if a voice spoke in the ear of his spirit, seemed to be supernatural. From the human side we should call it "an unanalyzed process of reasoning." His natural instinct, quickened by apprehension, intuitively reached the adverse conclusion. The part of the process which he could not analyze he regarded as supernatural. It is no objection to this explanation that the divine influence came to Socrates while he was yet a child.¹ The intuitions and apprehensions of childhood are often more acute than those of maturity. And the voice would not urge to any action,¹ for the subtile intuitions favorable to any action do not resist the will, but quietly coincide with it, and so make no sign.

But Socrates, although involved in the polytheism of his times, under the influence doubtless of the nature-philosophers who had preceded him, as well as by the process of his own reflection, had arrived at the conception of One Supreme God, of whom the many deities were instruments. Contemplating the external world, he distinguishes the creator and ruler of it from the other gods, and considers that He is related to the universe as the soul of man is to his body, everywhere pervading, controlling, and caring for it. Do not imagine, he says, that your soul can think about things here and things in Egypt and in Sicily, but that the thought of God is not capable of caring for all things at the same time. To such a supreme and all-wise God it is that Socrates refers more than once in his Apology. To Him he yields immediate and implicit obedience. His guidance he will accept wherever it may lead, even unto death.

THE WORK OF SOCRATES

11. His Work as a Reformer and Philosopher.—The work of Socrates was that of a reformer, and as such he is to be regarded.

He was not primarily a philosopher in the modern sense. He did not seek to arrive at truth for its own sake alone, nor to draw up a philosophical system. His aim was mainly practical. There were great evils existing in men and society about him. To those evils he was particularly sensitive, owing to the peculiar quality of his intellectual and moral nature. For those evils he was persuaded that he had the only and sufficient remedy. The application of that remedy in order to overcome those evils was the work of his life. His great aim was to make men care, not so much for their bodies, or money, or office, as for righteousness, and virtue, and the things of the soul.

But though he was not a philosopher primarily, in the means which he used he was one. His method of reforming men was by an intellectual process with and upon them which he termed philosophizing.<sup>3</sup> He spent his time among his fellow-citizens, in the constant and public quest of truth, with them and for their good. He was convinced that so only could he do his part in counteracting the evils in men and society about him.

12. Moral Condition of Athens. — The evils which Socrates found prevalent among the Athenians were deep seated. In the Apology they appear most prominently in the form of self-conceit. Men, everywhere in the city, thought they knew the greatest things, when really they knew nothing. This apparently harmless foible Socrates recognized as a symptom of a fatal malady, namely, the exaltation of the individual above truth and above right. He saw that a general skepticism, like a dry rot, was laying hold of society. There was no real knowledge or virtue, men claimed; whatever each man chose to believe or do was right. The ancient gods were being dethroned, and practical atheism was spreading. The old standards of morality were vanishing, and a capricious selfishness ruled in their stead. As a result, injustice, cruelty, and distrust prevailed in both private and public life.

Alcibiades and Critias may be taken as typical men of the times, the former the brilliant but unprincipled demagogue, the latter the most arbitrary and cruel of the oligarchs.

For this evil condition of things we may note two great causes. The first was the speculations of the philosophers.

- 13. The Earlier Philosophers. 1 Greek philosophy, beginning with Thales and developed by Pythagoras, Heraclītus, Empedocles. Anaxagoras, and their followers, had been an attempt to account for the origin of things on a physical basis. Because their knowledge of the external world was so limited, the systems which these devised were in the main but idle speculation, and had rendered philosophy discredited and futile. One great result, however, they had attained. Through the conception of cosmic energy they had arrived at the idea of Deity back of and over the gods of Olympus. But thereby they had shaken the belief of the people in the ancient divinities. Anaxagoras, for instance, taught that the sun was stone and the moon earth,2 and that supreme over all things was the all-wise and all-powerful essence, mind. Anaxagoras was exiled as an atheist, in spite of the influence of his friend Pericles, and the belief in one supreme Deity found little acceptance. Yet for all that, the old gods were becoming neglected and forsaken. Along with them also went faith in the existence of any gods at all. Such is generally the case in passing from an antiquated to a new and more adequate theology. But along with faith in the old gods went, in large degree, the high and severe morality of the heroic age.
- 14. The Sophists.<sup>3</sup> But a second cause of the evil condition of things was the influence of the sophists. The name was given to a set of men, mostly foreigners, who came to Athens as instructors of youth.<sup>4</sup> As a result of the increased wealth and power of the city, young men needed instruction as to how to care for their property, and to be able to argue and speak so as to defend themselves, if need be, in court, or to come before the ecclesia to advocate or oppose any measure in debate. Such ability was the more important because in the pure democracy of Athens paid advocates were not allowed, and because the way to distinction and influence lay in the power to work upon the people in the harangues of the ecclesia. In the absence of high schools and universities, to meet this want the sophists arose. Their method was to receive as pupils the young men who sought them, agreeing to instruct them in their sophistic arts and taking therefor a sum of money.1 In teaching their pupils thus to think and to speak, they necessarily had to do with rhetoric and philosophy. Of these sophists some of the most prominent were in the main good and able men, such as Protagoras of Abdera, in Thrace, (480-411), the first who called himself a sophist and taught for pay, - who made more money, Plato says, than Phidias and ten other sculptors.2 Another noted sophist was Gorgias of Leontini, in Sicily, who came on an embassy to Athens in 427 B.C., and acquired great celebrity as a teacher of rhetoric. Prodicus of Ceos and Hippias of Elis and many others might be mentioned.

15. Their Influence. — In philosophy, the sophists took a great step in advance. It was evident that the old field was for the time exhausted. So few facts were known about the external universe that all thought about it was mere baseless speculation. There remained, however, to be explored the field of man, the true and fruitful sphere of philosophy. To this field the general demand for education also invited, and into it the sophists entered, thus bringing philosophy out from the retirement of the schools and applying it to practical life. In so doing they debased it. For one thing, they subordinated truth to triumph in argument. Calling in rhetoric to their aid, they taught their pupils how to make the worse appear the better reason in order to mislead a jury or deceive the populace. Florid and specious argumentation took the place of honest investigation, and discussion degenerated into controversy.

But even more serious harm had been done to philosophy by the sophists. Under their influence it had become skeptical. Accepting as their belief the teaching of Anaxagoras, that mind is supreme, they developed the doctrine that "man is the measure of all things," as Pythagoras expressed it. This they interpreted, not in the broad and correct sense that the reason of man properly guarded is the only arbiter of truth. Instead, they taught a bald individualism. The notion or impression of the individual man was the truth for him and the law of his action. If that were so, there was no real knowledge and no fixed standard of right and wrong. Skepticism took the place of belief, and selfishness of moral obligation.

Under these influences, character and society rapidly deteriorated. Yet at the same time, and just by reason of this perverted philosophy, the Athenians seemed to themselves to be especially intelligent, and while they knew nothing aright, thought they knew the greatest things perfectly. Socrates saw underneath this self-conceit the atheism and skepticism of which it was but a symptom.

16. Other Causes. — For this decline in faith and morals an abundant opportunity had been offered in the wealth and luxury which had come to Athens as a result of the Persian war and the growth of the Athenian empire out of the confederacy of Delos; and in the party strife and passion which had been fomented in a city exasperated by its reverses in the Peloponnesian war and by the rise and expulsion of the Thirty Tyrants. One other influence deepened and diffused this conceit of knowledge. It was the pure democracy of the Athenian government, the natural tendency of which was to encourage the worthless and ignorant. The most incompetent men, because of the share they had in the government of the city, were led to feel that they were equal in wisdom to the wisest, even in the greatest matters.<sup>1</sup> Such a state of things was a very hothouse of incompetence and conceit.

17. The Socratic Not-knowing. — Against this conceit of knowledge which he found about him on all sides. Socrates opposed his claim of not-knowing.2 The Delphic oracle given to Chaerephon concerning him he found to be true in this respect: he was wiser than other men in that while they thought they knew and did not, he did not know and thought that he did not.2 His pressing of this claim, since it excited odium against him,3 is especially prominent in the Apology. But, like the self-conceit with which it was adroitly chosen to contend, his not-knowing was only an indication of a deeper condition. It implied that he had an idea of real knowledge, compared with which the first notion or impression of the individual is mere ignorance. Neither he nor any other man could truly know, while they rested satisfied with their own conceit. They must recognize their ignorance, as the first step, and then go on to acquire real knowledge by patiently finding out and carefully testing the opinions of others. He thus asserted that sound knowledge is no man's possession to begin with, but must be acquired by long investigation and comparison. So regarded, Socrates' claim of ignorance is seen to be not insincere or merely ironical, though it had the effect of irony. It was, in his view, the fundamental attitude of mind in all who would be truly wise. It was put forward with consummate tact because it at once rebuked the conceit of his opponents, and exhibited the chief feature of his own method by which he hoped to reform them.

This not-knowing of Socrates was the direct opposite of the sophistic skepticism. The main article in his creed was that real knowledge can be attained, and that by such knowledge alone could men be made better. Everywhere Socrates claims that knowledge gives the power to do right, that if men know what is right they will do it; that knowledge and virtue are identical.

This doctrine, merely hinted at in the Apology,<sup>1</sup> is in several of the dialogues amply developed. The understanding of what is good in reference to different classes of facts constitutes courage, justice, and every virtue. It was this conviction of his which incited Socrates to go on and show men the way to attain to real knowledge.

18. Real Knowledge Attainable. — But Socrates not only believed that if men knew, they would do right; he also was convinced that he had the method of arriving at real knowledge, and that he could teach it to men, and so save them and the state. This was the secret of his courage and of his influence.

We have seen that the sophists and all preceding philosophers had relied on the notions and impressions of the individual without subjecting them to critical examination and comparison. As a result, all real knowledge was, to them, impossible; philosophy had become discredited and futile, and caprice and license had taken the place of moral obligation. Socrates saw the remedy. This poison of individual skepticism must be counteracted by sure knowledge and positive morality. These could be attained only through exact general conceptions derived by induction through the arduous process of dialectic. The formation of exact conceptions in this patient and laborious manner was the essence of the work of Socrates' life. This was "the sword of the Spirit," having which in his grasp he was not afraid to go forth against the ignorance and sin of his age.

19. The Process. — The process by which Socrates arrived at exact general conceptions through which real knowledge was to be attained was by induction. He would begin with familiar instances in which by universal consent the general principle was involved, and from them would infer that the same was true in the less familiar case in hand. Instances of such induction are, in the Apology (20 A, B): since it is a good thing for the farmers to take trainers for colts and steers, so it must also be for parents to take instructors for their children. Or in the Crito (47 B; 48 A): since in developing the body the athlete regards the opinion only of his physician and trainer, so in seeking the welfare of the soul we must regard only the commands of the physician and overseer of the soul, namely, the truth. By thus deriving his fundamental principles from such well-known and perfectly evident instances, Socrates laid himself open to the charge of always talking about common or ignoble subjects, but he also laid a sure and solid foundation for his conclusions.

But induction must not only start from the commonest notions, it must also be conducted under constant criticism and definition so that all error may be eliminated. As a consequence, truth must be sought not alone, but in company. The co-operation of many minds must be obtained. The view proposed must be regarded from every side, and challenged and limited and criticised with the greatest severity, until at last a general conception is reached to which no exception can be taken. This will be real knowledge.

In the Apology, the persistency with which Socrates goes to all sorts and sets of men in Athens to establish the truth of the oracle, and in the Crito the manifold and varied discussion by which he proves to Crito that it is never right to retaliate, illustrate his method. This prolonged conversational and critical process of investigating a subject, much as a besieging army approaches a fortified city by mines and parallels and assaults of every sort on every side, received the name of dialectic.

20. The Object. — The object of this dialectic was to correct the vicious way in which others thought. It was not only for his own sake, it was even more to impress and reform others, that Socrates was working. By the dialogue the master at once involved the disciple in the investigation, by first eliciting from him an opinion and then subjecting it to a rigid and prolonged cross-examination. The pupil was straightway confronted with his error, self-confidence was checked, and individual opinion was supplemented by many-sided observation and criticism. The mind of the master at every step was brought to bear on the pupil, who was thus provoked and stimulated to think for himself. No better method has ever been devised for influencing and instructing men than this, which ever since has been called the Socratic method.

Sometimes by these discussions the truth would be attained and sometimes not, so difficult is it to reach. In several of the Dialogues of Plato, Socrates is represented as arriving at no conclusion in his search. Such are those which Thrasyllus terms tentative ( $\pi \epsilon \iota \rho a \sigma \tau \iota \kappa o \iota'$ ). Others are headed obstetric ( $\mu a \iota \iota \tau \tau \iota \kappa o \iota'$ ), in which the truth is brought to light as by the aid of a midwife.

21. Manner of Life of Socrates. — The manner, then, of Socrates' life, as it appears in its ultimate form in the Apology and the Dialogues elsewhere, is that of continual conversation with men, in which his effort is to renovate them intellectually and so morally, by inculcating in them correct methods of thought.

In order to converse with men he had to go where they were,—in the morning to the gymnasia or palaestrae, where young men were assembled, later in the day to the market place when it was crowded, among the tables where goods were sold or money changed,² to the shops of working men with whom he was fond of talking, to gatherings of friends, and all public places. He did not, like the sophists, teach particular companies of young men for a stipulated fee, but he conversed openly with all who would listen, for the love of it, to benefit them.³ Some interesting theme for discussion would be suggested by the occasion. Upon this, some one present would be led to express an opinion which, on examination, would be found to be incorrect or vague, which would lead to another modified statement, which in turn would have to be defined or amended. Finally Socrates, by proper inferences from self-evident premises, would either arrive at the true conclusion or would show that they could not rightly determine the matter. In this process Socrates displayed a wonderful resource and adroitness, by his acuteness and persistence and irony and wit at once provoking and delighting his listeners. In wisdom and knowledge also, as well as in dialectic skill, he is represented as easily surpassing his most able opponents. No honest and ingenuous man could engage in such talks without distrusting his old shiftlessness and skepticism and being inspired with belief in and love of the truth, and that, too, in practical directions which involved conduct and character.

22. Its Development Natural. — We may believe that this mode of life started naturally from small beginnings. At first Socrates was a sculptor working in his father's shop, but he had an active mind and a strong moral sense. These qualities led him to converse with men at every opportunity. In these talks the ignorance and conceit of his fellow-citizens were thrust upon him, and the desire to make them better began to burn in his soul. He found as he went on that he was admirably equipped for the task. He saw clearly what the trouble was, and felt that in his own mode of thought and life he had the remedy. He developed a wonderful skill in discourse and took great delight in the task of examining men. He had an infinite patience and persistence which opposition and failure could not overcome. His moral earnestness would not let him rest while he saw things so wrong about him. His unselfish spirit made him willing to neglect his own proper interests and ambitions, and labor with his fellow-men, going to them "as a father or an elder brother," and forbade him to take money for the service or to ask it, so leaving him in his old age in poverty.1 At the same time, all along, owing to a religious nature particularly sensitive, he was called, he asserts, to the work by the Divine will in every possible way, by the visions and oracles referred to in Apology, 33 C, and so urged on to give more and more time to this activity. Plato represents him in the Charmides 2 as fairly embarked upon it at the time of the battle at Potidaea (432 B.C.), when he was about forty years old. Aristophanes in the Clouds, which was given in 423 B.C., caricatures him as already a wellknown personage,1 and mentions no shop, no stone-cutting in the φροντιστήριον. But that up to this time he had entirely abandoned his workshop we should hardly suppose. We may perhaps reason that the practical and acute Xanthippe would hardly have consented to marry him when he had already given up work and become in her eyes a confirmed idler, and that he, easy going as he was in worldly matters, would not have been willing to incur the duties and responsibilities of marriage under such circumstances. Judging from the age of his children at the time of his trial,2 his marriage could not have been earlier than 420 B.C.. when he was fifty years old. Not long after that time, then, we may imagine that Chaerephon received the response from the oracle at Delphi,3 after which Socrates says that he devoted himself entirely to the task of examining his fellow-men.4

THE RESULTS OF THE WORK OF SOCRATES

23. Devoted Followers. — The natural result of such a decided personality acting so vigorously and continually upon all about him was very marked. He excited widespread antagonism, as we shall see later, but he also gained the admiration and devotion of many of the most gifted and best of the Athenians, particularly of the young men. They gathered about him, attracted by the piquancy of his conversation, and while they were delighted at the discomfiture of his opponents, they were powerfully influenced themselves for good. Alcibiades is made to testify to this in the Symposium. The Memorabilia shows how Xenophon was impressed. A considerable company of friends who followed and conversed with him appears in the various Dialogues of Plato.

In his trial, though the attack upon him had been bitter and his defense had been aggravating, the minority which voted in his favor was a very large one. But in Plato himself we have the most complete witness to the power of Socrates. Plato was a poet and a philosopher himself of the very highest rank, than whose the world has few greater names to show, yet he was so completely overmastered by his master Socrates that to a great degree he effaced himself in his writings and devoted his life to perpetuating his view of the person who had affected him so profoundly.

24. Moral Influence. — In Plato we have clearly exhibited the twofold nature of the influence which Socrates exerted. It was deeply intellectual, but his immediate followers were still more powerfully influenced by his character and spirit. What was most prominent about him was a strenuous and delightful personality, thoroughly devoted to noble ends. This Plato does not fail to recognize everywhere. Earnest reformer though Socrates was, a vein of playful humor, often in the form of irony, was frequently present in his discourse. In argument his fertility and dexterity amazed and delighted his friends and discomfited his opponents. Dealing at one moment with subjects common or even ignoble, as his theme led him on he became serious and profound, or rose to the loftiest heights of poetic eloquence. Without pretense or Pharisaism, in some respects even open to criticism when tried by our standards, the nobility and self-devotion of his life shine out everywhere. The charm of his personal character exalted and intensified the impression which his wisdom and wit produced. so that we may not wonder that Plato was so affected by him. Through Plato this moral and personal influence of Socrates has passed on down through all the generations since, working its ennobling work. No other witness to the truth who has sealed his testimony with his blood has had a wider influence, except the divine Jesus of Nazareth.

25. Intellectual Method. — But quite as marked and even more permanent was the intellectual influence which Socrates exerted. From Socrates a new period begins in Greek philosophy. This was not alone because of the field in which he exercised his activity. He did, indeed, bring philosophy down from external nature and make man his chief subject, which was a notable step in advance. But still more, Socrates exerted a great influence on thought and philosophy, because he exhibited for the first time the true method of scientific thinking. Previous to him the ideas of philosophers had been impressions and speculations rather than well-grounded thought. Socrates did for philosophy what Thucydides did for history: he made it scientific in that he based it upon its true foundations. Aristotle's statement is correct when he says 1 that the great merit of Socrates consists in the formation of conceptions ( $\tau \delta \delta \rho i \zeta \epsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota \kappa \alpha \theta \delta \lambda \delta v$ ) and induction  $(\tilde{\epsilon}\pi\alpha\gamma\omega\gamma\dot{\eta})$ . It is true he did not devise and write down philosophical treatises; he merely conversed with men, but in those conversations he was constantly exhibiting these methods. He never would accept the impression of the individual as the basis of real knowledge. Continually he went back to what was generally admitted, and by inference therefrom established his conclusions under constant criticism, limitation, and definition invited from every side. Knowledge thus established he held was real knowledge. To us this is old and commonplace, but to Socrates and his contemporaries it was original and wonderful, for the art of conscious thinking was being learned in the world for the first time.

Plato had the genius to see what was new and extraordinary in the method of his master. This method he devoted himself to reproducing, and he recognized Socrates himself as the author of his intellectual life. Through Plato, Aristotle was developed. Zeno, the father of the Stoics, derived his inspiration from the disciples of Socrates. So Socrates must be regarded as the beginner of a new period in Greek philosophy.

26. His Opponents. — But Socrates had not only devoted followers; his mode of life and conversation naturally excited dislike and opposition. This he tells us in the first part of his defense. As early as 423 B.C., when the Clouds of Aristophanes appeared, he was a subject for caricature. His singular personal appearance, and his zeal in his peculiar practice of philosophy, had already made him a marked character. Aristophanes erroneously represented him as a physicist or natural philosopher, and so made him liable in popular thought to the suspicion of atheism.1 He was so like both natural philosopher and sophist, that the distrust and odium popularly felt toward them were visited upon him also.2 But up to that time it would appear that he was the object of ridicule rather than of dislike. He was regarded as persistent and eccentric,3 but not yet as distinctly obnoxious. A little later, when the response of the Delphic oracle to Chaerephon had led him to devote himself continuously and more zealously to the examining of his fellow-citizens, he more and more incurred their hostility.<sup>5</sup> Those whose ignorance and self-conceit he thus exposed, many of them hated him. Year after year he persisted in this "public, notorious, and exasperating discourse." Many of his youthful followers imitated him,6 and by their lack of tact made him still more obnoxious. So a great mass of distrust and dislike accumulated. In the spring of 300 B.C. this opposition took the form of a legal prosecution. His accusers were Melētus, Anvtus, and Lyco.7 Of Meletus, who acted as spokesman, we know only that in the Euthyphro 8 he is described as a young man little known; that Socrates treats him slightingly all through his defense, and that he acted in behalf of the poets,7 from which it has been inferred that he was himself a poet or the son of a poet of the same name. Of Lyco we know nothing, except that he appears in behalf of the orators.<sup>7</sup>

Perhaps he was a professional speech-maker, and he may have prepared the speech which Meletus delivered. Anytus was a man of wealth, a tanner by trade, and a prominent leader of the democracy, just then especially influential because he had been active with Thrasybulus in driving out the Thirty Tyrants. He is represented in the Meno <sup>1</sup> as narrow-minded, a hater of the sophists, and as enraged at Socrates for suggesting the sending of a young man to them to be taught. Xenophon tells us <sup>2</sup> that Anytus had become incensed because Socrates tried to dissuade him from bringing up his son, a youth of promise, as a leather dealer. It is in Anytus probably that we find embodied the motives which at this particular time led to this prosecution of Socrates.

27. The Charge. — The charge preferred is stated only in general terms  $(\pi \omega_s \ \tilde{\omega} \delta \epsilon)$  in the Apology.<sup>3</sup> Xenophon gives it more exactly: "Socrates violates the laws inasmuch as he does not believe in the gods which the city believes in, but introduces other and new divinities; he also violates the laws by corrupting the youth." The first part of the charge, involving impiety  $(a\sigma \epsilon \beta \epsilon \iota a)$ , brought the case under the jurisdiction of the  $a\rho \chi \omega \nu$ Βασιλεύς. The second part of the charge, that he corrupted the youth, contained the real substance of the attack, but was covered by no law. Under the Thirty, Critias and Charicles, in settling what the laws should be, "introduced a clause forbidding any one to teach the art of disputation, expressly to annoy Socrates," and later warned him against holding further discourses with the young.<sup>5</sup> Such an arbitrary law had disappeared with the Thirty, but charges of impiety were not infrequently brought at Athens.6 and in this way his accusers could get Socrates before the court.

28. The Court. — The jury of consisted probably of 501 Athenian citizens over thirty years of age. Jury service was theoretically one of the duties of every citizen at Athens, but the number had been limited in practice to 6000 in all, chosen yearly, 600 from each tribe. These were divided into 10 sections of 500 each. leaving 1000 as a reserve, from which substitutes were taken in case regular jurors were necessarily absent. In more important cases two, three, four, and on one occasion that we know of, five sections sat together, giving juries of from 1001 to 2501 in number. In lesser cases the jury was 401, or sometimes only 201. The odd man was put in so that there might not be a tie vote.

Before entering on the duties of their office, the jurors took an oath 1 that they would vote "according to the laws and decrees of the Athenian people," and not on account of favor or enmity (οὖτε χάριτος ἔνεκα οὖτ' ἔχθρας). On a court day each one of the sections was assigned by lot to one of the court rooms, where the magistrate before whom the preliminary proceedings in any case had been held was present to preside. The parties to the suit were summoned by the herald, and when they appeared, after some kind of religious ceremony, the proceedings began. The clerk read the indictment 2 and the rejoinder, after which the plaintiff was called on to make his speech, and was followed by the defendant. The law directed that every man should conduct his own case, but it became customary when a man was not a good speaker himself, or when the case was very important, for the court to allow others (συνήγοροι) to come to his aid, as in this case Anytus and Lyco came to the aid of Meletus. When the speeches were ended the herald called on the dicasts to vote, which was done by each casting a ballot  $(\psi \hat{\eta} \phi os)$  into one or the other of two vessels, according as he wished to convict or acquit. If the vote was to convict, and if there was no regular penalty provided, the plaintiff in a speech proposed the penalty (τίμησις) which he desired, after which the defendant made a counter proposal ( $\partial \nu \tau \iota \tau \iota \mu \eta \sigma \iota s$ ). The vote on the penalty was then taken. If the plaintiff did not secure a fifth part of the votes, he was fined a thousand drachmae. If the accused was found guilty and condemned to imprisonment or death, he was taken charge of by the officers called the Eleven (oi  $\delta \nu \delta \epsilon \kappa a$ ).

29. Speech of his Accusers. — The principal speech for the accusers, it would seem, was made by Meletus, since Socrates refers to him chiefly in his reply. But Anytus and Lyco also came forward (Apol. 36 A. ἀνέβη "Ανυτος καὶ Λύκων) and spoke. Of these two, however, only Anytus is actually cited by Socrates.<sup>4</sup>

In regard to the first count in their indictment, that Socrates did not acknowledge the gods which the city acknowledged, his accusers seem to have urged simply the claim he made to be directed by  $(\theta \epsilon \hat{i} \acute{o} \nu \tau \iota \kappa a \iota \delta a \iota \mu \acute{o} \nu \iota \nu)$  the divine influence, which they perverted to mean a new divinity.

In regard to the second count, that he corrupted the youth, his accusers urged: that he taught his associates to despise the established laws, especially election by lot; that Critias and Alcibiades, who had associated with him, had turned out badly, Critias having been one of the most grasping and outrageous of the Thirty, and Alcibiades one of the most insolent and violent of the democratic party; that he taught the young to disregard parents and guardians, and prefer his authority to theirs; and that he quoted mischievous passages from Hesiod and Homer.<sup>6</sup>

THE APOLOGY OF SOCRATES

each chapter. The first part of his speech, which is the defense proper, divides logically into five members, as follows:

I. Introduction (I.-II.).

To conciliate his audience (I.).

Plan of defense (II.): Of the two sets of accusers he will first defend himself against those of long standing, and afterward against his present accusers.

- 2. Defense against his old-time accusers (III.-X.).
- 3. Defense against his present accusers (XI.-XV.).
- Socrates defends his past life in answering questions his opponents might ask in objection to it (XVI.-XXII).
- Peroration (XXIII.-XXIV.): He refuses to appeal to the pity of the jurors.

The judges then vote that Socrates was guilty, casting 281 ballots against him to 220 in his favor.

Meletus follows in a speech asking that the penalty,  $\tau i\mu \eta \sigma \iota s$ , be fixed at death.

Socrates in reply proposes the ἀντιτίμησις (XXV.–XXVIII.). If they will not award him maintenance in the Prytaneum, let the penalty be a fine of thirty minae.

The jurors then decide on the penalty of death, by a majority, according to Diogenes Laertius, eighty larger than their former vote. While the officers are busy, Socrates talks first to those who voted against him, and then to those who voted in his favor (XXIX.-XXXIII.).

31. Dramatic Analysis. — The Apology, like the Dialogues, is constructed on dramatic as well as on logical lines. If we regard the dialogi personae as Aristophanes (representing the old-time accusers), Meletus, and Socrates, it conforms to Plato's usual method. The action of the dialogue is the discussion whether Socrates ought to be put to death, and the two indictments may be regarded as two antagonists which he summarily puts down. The piece falls naturally into a prologue, three episodes, and an epilogue, corresponding thus to a five act drama.

- Act I. Prologue (I.-II.): Introduces the situation, characters, and beginning of the action.
- Act 2. First Episode (III.-X.): The  $\delta \acute{\epsilon} \sigma \iota s$  or complication fairly begins.
- Act 3. Second Episode (XI.-XV.): The complication is developed.

  Note that the slighting treatment of Meletus here heightens the dramatic quality of the speech.
- Act 4. Third Episode (XVI.-XXII.): The λύσις, in which, opponents having been put aside, Socrates presents his life in the way which seems to him best.
- Act 5. Epilogue (XXIII.-XXIV.): The practical conclusion or  $\tau \epsilon \lambda os$ . (My life is noble, for I will not do an ignoble thing to save it.)

The after speeches are to be regarded as dramatically reinforcing the epilogue of the main dramatic piece. His proposing of the penalty and his talk about the future display in still higher terms the nobility of his life and character.

32. The Apology substantially what Socrates said.<sup>1</sup> — The Apology is not, of course, a shorthand report of the very words used, but Plato was present as a most interested listener, and wrote it probably very soon afterward, while the matter was fresh in his mind. What Socrates said and the way he said it, under such conditions, must have been very unique and effective, so that Plato would have desired to report it as accurately as he could, especially as he was still under the immediate influence of his master, not having developed the comparative independence of a later period. His report would come at once into the hands of the other pupils and admirers of Socrates, who would resent any unnecessary deviation from what he had said. The individual traits of Socrates, as we otherwise know them, are here clearly seen, his homely direct method, his strain of irony, his dialectic skill, his moral courage, his civic devotion, his religious faith. Hence we may conclude that the Apology does give us, with substantial accuracy, a view of the person of Socrates, his method, and the process of his thought in his defense.

At the same time, we must remember, everything has passed through the artistic and idealizing mind and memory of the pupil, and Plato was himself a poet-philosopher of the very first rank. So it was unavoidable that this reported speech should take form and color somewhat from the medium through which it had passed. Not long before this, Thucydides in his history had given his masterly reports of the speeches of Pericles, and by viewing the Apology as a similar set speech, without any accompanying narrative, we shall best comprehend what it really is. But the greater intimacy and sympathy existing between Socrates and Plato makes certain here a far closer reproduction. A better parallel is the discourses of Jesus as reported for us by the beloved disciple.

33. Real Reasons for his Condemnation. — Why was Socrates found guilty and condemned to death? To us he appears as an interesting and noble character, perhaps the greatest glory of the city which saw fit to kill him. Aside from what is mentioned in the defense, namely, the distrust of him as being atheistic like the natural philosophers, and insincere like the sophists, and a corrupter of youth, and aside from the dislike which his cross-examination had caused, two other reasons may be mentioned.

His political views were not acceptable to the democracy. Socrates was a moderate oligarch. He did not believe in the election of officers of state by lot, nor in other features of a pure democracy. But in 399 B.C., only four years after the expulsion of the Thirty Tyrants, anything that savored of oligarchy was especially odious to the populace. Suspicion of this sort was probably present as a dark background, in the minds of the jurors. But as this is barely mentioned by Xenophon, in his review of what the accusers urged, and as it is not referred to in Plato's Apology, it cannot be regarded as having directly influenced the result very much.

The real, immediate reason why Socrates was treated so severely is the tone of fearless independence which he adopted all through his trial. To the jurors this must have seemed impertinence and insolence. At the outset he feels that the jurors are prejudiced, and he consistently abstains from giving them their ordinary official title. He refuses, for what probably seemed to the jurors simulated reasons, to give up the mode of life which they disliked in him, even if they would set him free. He refuses to appeal to the pity of the jurors at the end of the defense proper, although he knows that the refusal will displease some of them. He suggests as his penalty the right to dine with the honored guests of the city in the Prytaneum, which must have seemed to the jurors trifling impertinence.

This attitude of careless defiance fanned into a flame all the slumbering embers of old enmity and distrust. Xenophon expressly tells us that Socrates might have been acquitted "if in any moderate degree he would have conciliated the favor of the dicasts."

We are not to suppose that Socrates designed to irritate his judges. He simply speaks and acts just as sincerely and frankly as he would have done if his life had not been at stake. He does not flinch through fear of what his accusers may do. He regards this as a supreme moment in which to fulfil his mission, and impress his views of life and duty upon the city. It may be best for himself and for Athens that he be not acquitted. The whole matter of life and death he leaves entirely in the hands of God. Courage, self-sacrifice, and trust in the Divine guidance are the motives which appear conspicuously in all that he says and does.

THE CRITO

34. Its Subject. — This dialogue takes its name from Socrates' contemporary and fellow-demesman, who is the other interlocutor in it. He had abundant wealth and was a devoted friend. After Socrates was condemned, a month elapsed before he was put to death. The day before his trial the sacred ship was crowned, in token of the beginning of the embassy which every year was sent by Athens to the shrine of Apollo, at Delos. This embassy was in commemoration of the deliverance which Theseus was said to have wrought for the city by slaying the Cretan Minotaur and so saving his own life and that of his companions, the seven virgins and seven youths, sent every nine years as tribute to the monster. From the time when this ship was crowned until its return, the city was kept ceremonially clean, and it was unlawful to inflict the punishment of death upon condemned criminals.

During these thirty days in prison the friends of Socrates visited him frequently. Two of the conversations held in those days are preserved to us in the Crito and Phaedo. In the Crito the subject discussed is: Is it ever right for a man who has been wronged to retaliate? in its practical application to the case of Socrates, who has been unjustly condemned by the laws and is now urged by his friend to escape from prison. Crito has made every arrangement to get him away, but Socrates refuses on the ground that so to do would violate his obligations as a citizen.

35. The Line of Argument:

- I. Introduction (I.-II.): Socrates must die on the third day.
- 2. Crito urges him to escape from prison (III.-V.).
- 3. Socrates justifies his refusal (VI.-X.).
- 4. The laws enforce the argument of Socrates (XI.-XVI.).
- 5. Conclusion (XVII.): He cannot disregard the arguments of the laws.
- 36. Dramatic Analysis. The Crito is an example of a dialogue in which the conversation is given directly, and not merely reported as it is in the main part of the Phaedo. So the characters are introduced and the situation is developed by implication, as is the case in the tragedies of Aeschylus and Sophocles. The dramatic skill exhibited in this introduction is not inferior to that of even those great masters. The action of the dialogue is the discussion whether Socrates may justly escape from prison. This dialogue also corresponds to a five-act drama.

- Act 1. Prologue (I.-II.): Introduces the situation, characters and beginning of the action.
- Act 2. First Episode (III.-V.): The δέσις or complication begins.
- Act 3. Second Episode (VI.-X.): The complication heightened.
- Act 4. Third Episode (XI.–XVI.): The λύσις, in which the crisis of the argument is past and the conclusion is unavoidable.
- Act 5. Epilogue (XVII.): The practical conclusion (The laws must be obeyed).

THE PHAEDO

37. Characters and Setting. — Phaedo, a native of Elis of noble birth, brought to Athens as a captive in war, probably only two or three years before the death of Socrates, after being liberated, had become his devoted follower. Not long after his master's death, possibly on his way to Elis just after that time, at Phlius, south of Sicyon in the valley of the Asopus, he narrates to Echecrates and other sympathetic Phliasians the last sayings and doings of Socrates. This narration takes us back to Athens, to the prison where, on the last day of his life, the disciples and friends of Socrates are assembled. Phaedo explains to the Phliasians how it was that the execution of Socrates was deferred so long a time after his sentence, until the return of the sacred ship from Delos, and tells who the friends were who were present. Prominent among these were the two Thebans, Simmias and Cebes, referred to in the Crito, who bear, after Socrates, the chief part in the discussion which follows. Another was Crito, who is represented here as in the Crito as being interested in everything pertaining to the personal comfort of Socrates. As he had tried there to induce Socrates to save his life by escaping from prison, here Crito is represented as receiving in private his master's last instructions in regard to his family, and finally closed his eyes in death. Plato was not in the little company. He was ill, perhaps from grief, as Plutarch says.

When the friends of Socrates enter the prison, Xanthippe and the three children are sent home in the care of one of Crito's servants, but return, toward evening, for a final farewell. We find in her here no trace of the shrewish temper with which she is generally credited, though she is evidently ungoverned and violent in her emotions.

38. Analysis. — In the first three chapters (which is all of the prologue contained in this book), we have given to us the characters and the situation. Because the situation is narrated and not given directly as in the Crito, a better opportunity is afforded to describe in detail just what happened and how Socrates conducted himself.

The main body of the Dialogue (omitted in this book) is an argument, conducted by Socrates, to show that the wise and virtuous man will meet death with cheerfulness, because the soul is immortal.

The last four chapters, which form the epilogue, are a practical illustration by Socrates of the truth of his theme. He meets death calmly and cheerfully, unshaken even by the sobs and tears of his friends.

NOTES ON THE APOLOGY

St. I. p. 17. These initials and numbers found in the margin of modern editions of Plato refer to the corresponding volume and page of the edition of Henricus Stephanus (Henri Estienne, the distinguished French scholar and printer), which appeared in 1578 and has been adopted as the standard for reference. Each page is divided into five parts by the letters (a) b c d e down the margin. (Appendix II., I, a.)

Title, AΠΟΛΟΓΙΑ ΣΩΚΡΑΤΟΤΣ. For details as to the prosecutors, the charge, the court, and the trial, see Introduction, 26–29. As to how exact a report this is of what Socrates actually said, see Introduction, 32.  $[\dot{\eta}\theta\iota-\kappa\dot{\kappa}\delta]$ : Thrasyllus (70 A.D.), who arranged the Dialogues of Plato into tetralogies (Int. 3), also made a philosophical distribution of them into classes, according to their subject or method and spirit. (See Diogenes Laertius, III. 56; Grote's Plato, chap. IV.) The Apology he put under the head  $\dot{\eta}\theta\iota\kappaol$ , or ethical.

The other Dialogues of Plato have a list of the dialogi personae, TA TOY  $\Delta IA.\Lambda O\Gamma O\Upsilon$   $\Pi PO\Sigma \Omega IIA$ , prefixed. The Apology, being a monologue, has none, but it is constructed on the same dramatic plan as the other Dialogues, the two sets of accusers taking the place of two interlocutors or antagonists, whom the protagonist Socrates overthrows. The whole introduction of the speech forms the dramatic prologue (Int. 31).

I.-II. INTRODUCTION (PROLOGUE)

- I. (To conciliate his audience.) My accusers have spoken mostly falsehoods, but in an elaborate manner. I will speak only the truth. Permit me to do it in my ordinary, simple, conversational way.

those who voted in his favor. Meletus, the only time he addresses them (XIV. 23), calls them ἄνδρες δικασταί. Socrates, from the outset believing that the majority of the court was prejudiced against him, regards them as not fair judges and purposely abstains from giving them the title he does not think they deserve. 2. ὑπὸ . . . κατηγόρων: although  $\pi \epsilon \pi \delta \nu \theta \alpha \tau \epsilon$  is active in form, it is passive in signification, and so is followed by ὑπό with the genitive. H. 820; G. 1241; B. 513; Go. 499, a. -8' oûv, at any rate. What is certain is set over against that which is uncertain. 3. kal autos, even myself, of whom it was least to have been expected. - $\delta \lambda$ ίγου =  $\delta \lambda$ ίγου  $\delta \epsilon \hat{\imath}$ , has the force of an adverb. H. 743; G. 1116, b; B. 642, note 1; Go. 569. - έμαυτοῦ ἐπελαθόμην, forgot who I was. 4. yé intensifies  $d\lambda \eta \theta \dot{\epsilon} s$ , and so contrasts it with  $\pi \iota \theta \alpha \nu \hat{\omega} s$ . In translation, here as often, this force of  $\gamma \epsilon$  may be indicated by emphasizing the preceding word. — ώς ἔπος εἰπεῖν: the denial is possibly too sweeping, and is qualified in this way. For the infinitive, see H. 956; G. 1534; B. 642, 1; Go. 569. 5. αὐτῶν (subjective gen. after  $\xi \nu$ ) = 'they said,' and is explained by  $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu \dots \dot{\epsilon} \psi \epsilon \dot{\nu} \sigma \alpha \nu \tau o$ . A similar construction is  $\alpha \hat{v} \tau \hat{\omega} \nu$  in l. 11. 6.  $\hat{\omega} \nu$ : relative attracted into the case of its antecedent, for a which would be cognate acc. — τοῦτο is resumptive of έν. 7. χρή is strictly a noun. Plate may have intended that either fort or the opt.  $\epsilon i \eta$  should be supplied with it. II. 932, 2; G. 1487; B. 267; Go. 390. (App. III.) 8. ώς marks the reason as offered by his accusers, not by himself. H. 978; G. 1574; B. 656, 3; Go. 593, c. 11. τοῦτο: resumptive of τὸ . μὴ alσχυνθηναι. 12. εί μη αρα, Lat. nisi for another reason he has to beg that forte, ironical. His opponents, of course, would make no such statement. 13. εἰ μὲν γάρ, for truly if. μέν is here evidently a weak form of μήν, and no correlative clause with  $\delta \epsilon$  is to be supplied. Note that the condition and conclusion in this sentence are of different forms. H. 901, b; G. 1421, 1; B. 612, 2; Go. 646. 14. οὐ κατὰ τού-Tous, not after their fashion, as explained in l. 17. 16. ὑμεῖς δ' ἐμοῦ: we should have expected  $\dot{\epsilon}\mu o\hat{v}$   $\delta\dot{\epsilon}$ , as the speakers really are contrasted. 17. κεκαλλιεπημένους . . . ρήμασί τε καὶ ὀνόμασιν, arguments expressed in beautiful words and phrases. This refers to the choice and arrangement of words, while κεκοσμημένους (l. 19) means adorned with tropes or rhetorical figures. Their discourse was as elaborate as it was untrue. 21. γὰρ δίκαια: γάρ introduces the reason why he is not anxious about the precise words he may use or the form his speech may take. He knows that he has right on his side. 22. προσδοκησάτω: for the imperat., see II. 874, b; G. 1347; B. 584, note; Go. 485. 23. τῆδε τῆ ἡλικία, for a man of my age. The abstract for the concrete. μειρακίω, according to our idiom, instead of being in the dative, would be in the nominative, the subject of av  $\pi\lambda\dot{\alpha}\tau\tau\sigma\iota$  to be supplied from the participle. — πλάττοντι ( fabricating) agrees in case with ἡλικίω, but in gender with the person suggested. The reference here (as far as είσιέναι) is not to elaboration, but to falsification, to which idea δίκαια in l. 21 brings back his thoughts. " Α μειράκιον, to hide a fault, uses falsehood and not rhetoric" (Riddell). 24. καὶ μέντοι, and vet, though he is neither elaborate nor false, πάνυ, very earnestly. 27. έν άγορα . . . καὶ ἄλλοθι: the Apology is in the conversational key throughout, and often so in form, as was Socrates' ordinary discourse (Int. 21). 28. "va, where. In this sense "va is rare in good Attic 32. έβδομήκοντα: see App. III. and Int. 5, note 1. - 33. λέξεως: the gen, depends on  $\xi \dot{\epsilon} \nu \omega s$ . II. 756; G. 1147; B. 362, 3; Go. 518, b. - av: this particle is repeated, as often when the sentence is long. H. So4; G. 1312; B. 439, note 2. 35. φωνή, dialect. Athens compelled her subject states to bring many of their causes for trial to her courts, so that strange dialects were not infrequently heard by Athenian jurors (M. and S. p. 753, and note 19). 36. καὶ δη καί: after ωσπερ we should have looked for ουτω καί. Βν και δη καί especial attention is called to a particular case under a general statement. 38. χείρων. βελτίων: there are advantages and disadvantages in Socrates' conversational style of speaking when compared with that of his accusers, but style is here a quite subordinate matter. - av ein, may prove to be. For this use of the potential opt., see H. 872; G. 1331; B. 563; Go. 479. — αὐτὸ δὲ τοῦτο, but this alone. The intensive αὐτό with δέ emphasizes τοῦτο in contrast with τὸν μὲν τρόπον (1. 37). 40. αὕτη (for τοῦτο), referring to the sentence  $\alpha \dot{\nu} \tau \dot{\rho} \ldots \mu \dot{\eta}$ , is attracted into the gender of ἀρετή.

II. (Plan of defense.) My accusers are of two kinds, those of long standing who are the more formidable, and my present accusers. Let me first defend myself against the first.

the infin., see H. 944, a; G. 1527; B. natural philosopher (Int. 13). — τον allowance be made for him. - καl | 634. - ἀπολογήσασθαι: notice the force of the middle form. The active voice of this verb is not in use. 2. πρός is used to express action toward an object, with or without a hostile sense. Compare πρὸς ὑμᾶς, l. 5. 5. καὶ πάλαι: kal is intensive. The Clouds of Aristophanes had appeared in 423 B.C., twenty-four years before (Int. 22). 6. πολλά ήδη έτη makes prominent the continuance of that which began (πάλαι) long ago. — καί: in accordance with the Greek idiom, but superfluous in English. See XVI. 9, πολλούς καὶ ἀγαθούς ἄνδρας, 'many good men.' 7. τους άμφι "Ανυτον, Anytus and his party. H. 791, 3; G. 1202, 3; B. 400, 2. Anytus is mentioned because he was the most influential of the accusers (Int. 26). 9. ὑμῶν τοὺς πολλούς, most of you. For oi πολλοί in this sense, see H. 665; G. 967. Notice position of the personal pronoun. H. 673, b; G. 977, I; B. 457, I; Go. 554. 10. παραλαμβάνοντες, taking in charge. The word often means to take in order to educate, as pupils. 11. ἐμοῦ οὐδὲν άληθές: for various readings of the text, see App. III. — τὶς Σωκράτης, a certain Socrates. Tis by its indefiniteness is depreciatory and contemptuous. 12. σοφὸς ἀνήρ: this expression might refer to either natural philosopher or sophist, and so the prejudice popularly felt toward both those classes is unjustly directed toward Socrates (Int. 26). — The items of the charge which follows are derived from the Clouds, μετέωρα φροντιστής from ψυχῶν σοφῶν . . . φροντιστήριον, l. 94, and τὰ ὑπὸ γῆς ἄπαντα ἀναζητηκώς from ζητοῦσινοὖτοι τὰ κατὰ γῆς, l. 188. 1. For δίκαιος used personally with These two imply that Socrates was a ήττω λόγον κρείττω ποιών (l. 13) is suggested by the Clouds, 112 ff., and later in that comedy Δίκαιος Λόγος and "Adikos Abyos are introduced. last item implies that Socrates was a sophist (Int. 14 and 15). — μετέωρα φροντιστής: the acc. depends on the verbal idea which is contained in the noun. H. 713; G. 1050; B. 330; Go. On φροντιστής, see App. III. 15. οἱ δεινοί: the article with the predicate makes it equivalent to a relative clause, who are formidable. 17. οὐδέ, 'do not believe in the gods either.' Atheism was charged against Socrates and his followers, in the Clouds. 20. έν ή αν . . . έπιστεύσατε, in which you would have been most likely to believe them. This is not the hypothetical, but the potential, indicative. GMT. 244. This must be carefully distinguished from the use of av with imp, or aor, to denote customary action. H. 835; G. 1296; B. 565; Go. 461, b. Notice that in this expression Socrates avoids saying that any of his audience actually had believed his accusers. See note on III. 4. 21. έρήμην (δίκην) κατηγοροθντές, prosecuting a suit that went altogether by default. A suit was said to be ἐρήμη when the defendant did not appear. Socrates of course could not be present to defend himself, when all throughout Athens and during so many years these things were being said about him. 22. δ δὲ πάντων άλογώτατον: supply τοῦτό ἐστιν. Η. 611; G. 891, 1; Β. 308; Go. 493, b. 24. πλην εί, except in case.  $\pi \lambda \dot{\eta} \nu$  represents the apodosis. GMT. 477. — κωμωδιοποιός: Aristophanes chiefly is alluded to, although other comic poets, as Eupolis and Ameipsias, had ridiculed Socrates, of accusers), the scene and the attend-

25. With the comic poets who are known, ὅσοι δέ contrasts the unknown assailants, who again in what follows are divided into the malicious and the innocent. 26. oi δè καί, others also, just as if there had been οἱ μέν after όσοι δέ. (οἱ μὲν) . . . χρώμενοι and οἱ δè . . . πείθοντες together make up ὅσοι δέ. 27. ἀπορώτατοι, most difficult to deal with. When Socrates was slandered he was not present to defend himself, and now when he is to defend himself he cannot get his accusers before him. 30. σκιαμαχείν is figurative in meaning but is so defined by ἀπολογούμενον that it is readily coordinated by  $\tau \epsilon$  kal with  $\epsilon \lambda \epsilon \gamma \chi \epsilon \iota \nu$ . 37.  $\epsilon \ell \epsilon \nu$ , well then. This interjection is used when the speaker implies that what has been said, being quite evident, is of course accepted by his hearers, and he will pass on to something else. 39. διαβολή here means prejudice excited by false accusations. 40. ἔσχετε, νου acquired. The aor, is inceptive. 41, et τι αμεινον: the fact that it is his own life which is at stake does not prevent Socrates from being entirely judicial. It may not be best for the city or for himself that he should be acquitted. This expression gives us the key to Socrates' whole attitude in this defense. He is "ready to be offered," if needs be (Int. 33). 42. πλέον τί με ποιῆσαι, that I should accomplish something.  $\pi \lambda \acute{\epsilon}o\nu =$  'more than if I did not.' 45.  $\tau \acute{\omega}$ θεώ, God, not 'the god' (Int. 10). Along with perfect fearlessness of man or death Socrates joins entire trust in God.

The dramatic prologue ends here, the actors (Socrates and his two sets ant circumstances (the court room and cates excessive zeal. He takes more the trial), and the subject of contention (Is Socrates guilty of the charge?), all having been introduced. The eight chapters which follow correspond to the first episode or second act.

III.-X. DEFENSE AGAINST HIS OLD-TIME ACCUSERS

III. My old-time accusers charge me with being a physicist and teaching men such things. I am not a physicist, - I do not know about and never talked about such things.

4. οἱ διαβάλλοντες: the exciters of this prejudice Socrates represents as being certain individuals who, with time and perseverance, had done their work. He thus adroitly avoids both imputing this charge to the judges, which would have further offended them, and designating the whole people as guilty of misrepresenting him. These prejudices and accusations are made more tangible by throwing them into the form of a technical indictment, supposed to be preferred by certain men and read before the court. 5. ώσπερ qualifies not only κατηγόρων but also ἀντωμοσίαν and ἀναγνῶναι: 'to read, as it were, their indictment, so to speak, just as though they were plaintiffs.' Really there is no technical indictment, nor any formal reading on I. 2.

pains than enough = is a busybody. 9. τοιαύτη τίς, somewhat such. It is not possible to give the exact words of such imaginary accusers. 10. έωρᾶτε: the imperfect denotes the time when they had seen the Clouds acted. that comedy Aristophanes had given expression to these widespread accusations. 11. Σωκράτη τινά: the indefinite indicates that the character in the comedy bore no resemblance to the real Socrates. — περιφερόμενον: in the Clouds Socrates was represented as a foolish speculator in celestial phenomena, suspended aloft in a basket, saying in l. 225,  $\dot{\alpha}\epsilon\rho\sigma\beta\alpha\tau\hat{\omega}$  καὶ  $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota$ φρονω τὸν ήλιον. 13. Note the unusual separation of πέρι from the case it governs. This is the only preposition which, in prose, stands after its case and suffers anastrophe. II. 110; G. 116, 1; B. 68. 14. οὐκ ὡς ἀτιμάζων: according to Xenophon (Mem. I. 1, 11) Socrates did disparage the study of physics. Plato represents him as disparaging no truth, but as doubting whether it had been attained in the domain of physics. 16. μή . δίκας φύγοιμι, may I never be prosecuted by Meletus on such charges. See App. III. δίκην φεύγειν is equivalent to the pass. διώσεσθαι, and so is followed by  $\dot{v}\pi\dot{v}$  with gen. of the agent. See note 17. alla yap, but really. by the official court reader (Int. 28), There is an ellipsis here. The full just as the accusers are only imagined expression would be, 'but I need say as present in court. — ἀντωμοσίαν is no more, for.' 18. αὐτούς, your selves, here the sworn charge or indictment is in apposition with ὑμῶν τοὺς πολλούς, of the prosecuting party. 6. In this and is in the acc. instead of the gen. fictitious indictment Socrates gathers because τοὺς πολλούς is the more emtogether and formulates the prejudices phatic. For another reading of the of many years. It practically repeats text here, see App. III. 21. οί τοιοῦτοι II. 11-14. περί in περιεργάζεται indi- is the subject, as is indicated by the article, those of you who are such. | the irregularity disappears. See App. πολλοί is made emphatic by the position which it occupies.

IV. I am not a teacher of men for money. To be a teacher is a very fine thing, for various reasons; but I do not profess to have this skill.

1. ἀλλὰ γάρ resumes the ἀλλὰ γάρ of l. 17 in the preceding chapter. ἐστίν has for its predicate ἀληθές in 1. 4. By being kept in suspense till the close of the sentence,  $d\lambda \eta \theta \dot{\epsilon}s$  is emphasized. - οὐδέ, nor yet. It differs from οὔτε, which we might have expected, in that an adversative idea is introduced. οὐδέ, l. 3, repeats the οὐδέ of l. I, and the resumptive clause may be rendered: that is not true either. One of the main points in which Socrates differed from the sophists was just this, that he did not take money for teaching his pupils (Int. 14 and 22). 4. ἐπεί, ' (and yet I should be glad to), since,' or omitting the clause to be supplied, although. - καὶ τοῦτό . . καλὸν εἶναι, this too (as well as the study of physics, III. 14) seems to me to be a fine thing. 5.  $\epsilon \ell$  .  $\epsilon \ell \eta$ : the optative indicates considerable doubt whether any one really can. 6. Γοργίας τε ό Δεοντίvos: for Gorgias and the sophists in general, see Int. 14. Protagoras was no longer living (d. 411). 7. γάρ introduces the first reason for καλόν, 1. 4. 8. οῖός τ' ἐστίν would naturally be followed by πείθειν (governing τούς νέους), which appears, in anacoluthon, as πείθουσι. By this change of construction the indicative makes more prominent that which is remarkable. The subject of  $\pi \epsilon i \theta o \nu \sigma \iota$  is  $\xi \kappa \alpha \sigma \tau o s$  used as a collective. H. 609, a; G. 900; B. 500;

9. τῶν ἐαυτῶν πολιτῶν: the III. genitive depends upon the & which follows. 12. πρός in προσειδέναι has the force of besides. To gain gratitude, as well as money, caps the climax. - ἐπεὶ καί: since there is another sophist also, as well as the ones just mentioned. In the following reported conversation with Callias, a second reason is introduced why it is a fine thing (καλόν, l. 4) to teach young men. It is: if it is good to train young colts and steers, much more must it be to fit young men for life and work. 16. Καλλία: Callias was a verv wealthy Athenian who was exceedingly hospitable to sophists, as is represented humorously in the first chapters of the Protagoras. 20. 6s εμελλεν, whose duty it would be. For the omission of av in this conclusion, see H. 897, b; G. 1402, 3; B. 567, 1; Go. 460, a. For the fut. infin. in ποιήσειν, see H. 855, a; G. 1277; B. 549, 1; Go. 570, b. 21. ἀρετήν: cognate acc. after the adjectives. H. 717; G. 1053; B. 332; Go. 536, d. 25. τῆs άνθρωπίνης τε καὶ πολιτικής: the appropriate excellence of young men is to be good men and good citizens. 26. τῶν υίέων: objective gen. after  $\kappa \tau \hat{\eta} \sigma \iota \nu$ . 28.  $\hat{\eta}$  8'  $\delta$ 's: for the use of the relative form as a demonstrative, see H. 655, a; G. 1023, 2; B. 443, 3; Go. 560. 29. 2. τὸ σὸν τί ἐστι πρᾶγμα; what have you been doing? 4. περιττότερον πραγματευομένου: the participle is not conditional, or the negative would not have been οὐδέν. Η. 1025; G. 1612; B. 431, 1; Go. 486. It denotes cause, since you were not busying vourself more than others. For the ethical dative, see II. 770; G. 1171; B. 381; Go. 523, a. 24. Ths busybody, he must have been in some γαρ έμης: Socrates modestly refrains way eccentric. 7. αὐτοσχεδιάζωμεν, from adding σοφίας, which is contained act unadvisedly; properly said of those in the following depreciatory conditional clause. 26. τον θεον τον έν Δελthe impulse of the moment, and here \phoîs: for the relation which the oracle bore to the development of Socrates' the judges. 10. ὄνομα refers to σοφός. missionary career, see Int. 22. story which is to follow. The recollection of the rapacity and cruelty of the Thirty Tyrants (June, 404-Feb., 403) was still vivid. 29. φυγήν refers to the expulsion from Athens of all opposed to the oligarchical government, and  $\kappa \alpha \tau \hat{\eta} \lambda \theta \epsilon$  to the return of the democracy under Thrasybulus at the end of the eight months' reign of the Thirty. 30. olos ην Χαιρεφών: Chaerephon's energetic and enthusiastic disposition is caricatured by Aristophanes, Clouds, l. 104. In the Charmides he is termed μανικός. His devotion to Socrates is indicated by the words  $\dot{\epsilon}\mu\dot{o}s$   $\tau\dot{\epsilon}$   $\dot{\epsilon}\tau\alpha\hat{\iota}\rho\sigma$  (1. 27) and by the act here described. 31. καί δή ποτε καί, once in particular. Chaerephon has been called σφοδρός. καὶ δη καί introduces a special instance of this quality. 32. ὅπερ λέγω. as I say. ὅπερ refers to μη θορυβήσητε, 1. 21. 33. δή, really, again calls attention to the extraordinary nature of the question. 34. ἀνείλεν οὖν ἡ Πυ-Ola: the words of the Pythian priestess, according to Diogenes Laertius (II. 37), were ἀνδρῶν ἀπάντων Σωκράτης σοφώ-Taros. The scholiast on Aristoph. Clouds, 1. 144, gives them, σοφός Σοφοκλής, σοφώτερος δ' Εὐριπίδης, ἀνδρῶν δὲ πάντων Σωκράτης σοφώτατος. 35. δ άδελφός: Chaerecrates. Socrates calls on this brother as a witness who would know the facts at first hand.

VI. I found this true in regard to men in public life.

4. τί ποτε αἰνίττεται, what, pray, should be. Which we oug does he intimate in his dark saying? Note the vividness which ποτέ gives to these questions. Socrates modestly feles that the plain meaning of the oracle is apparently false, but it must have some meaning,—what is it? Dat. of degree of difference.

5. σοφὸς ὤν: by a different construction in VIII. 2, the participle is put in the dative. GMT. 908. 7. ψεύδεταί γε: the force of  $\gamma \epsilon$  may be given by emphasizing the preceding word. Whatever explanation may be suggested, he does not lie. That is ruled out by the very nature of the god, οὐ γὰρ θέμις αὐτῷ. 9. μόγις πάνυ, after long cogitation. - τοιαύτην τινά: predicate, somewhat as follows. 12. To maytelov. τῷ χρησμῷ, the oracle, the response. - ὅτι introduces direct discourse and is equivalent to quotation marks. H. 928, b; G. 1477; Go. 623. So also in 23. 14. διασκοπών . . . καὶ διαλενόμενος are in the nom, instead of the dat., as is not infrequent with έδοξέ μοι, in anacoluthon. διά in διασκοπῶν signifies carefully considering. διαλεγόμενος resumes the thought after the parenthetic clause, and indicates that conversation was the test he applied. (App. III.) 15. τῶν πολιτικῶν, of the men in public life. 'Statesmen' is too good a word here, as 'politicians' is too bad a one. — πρὸς ον . . . τι επαθον, with reference to whom I had an experience somewhat like this. 17. ἔδοξέ μοι (inceptive aor.), I came to the conclusion. 22. πρòs έμαυτὸν . . . έλογιζόμην: like our I thought to myself. 25. καλὸν κάγαθόν: these words are almost always joined together, as if they expressed one idea. The masc, of this phrase denotes the perfect man, who is as he should be. Which we ought gives nearly the sense. On Socrates' profession of ignorance, see Int. 17. 26. ώσπερ οὖν, as really, you see. 27. σμικρώ τινι αὐτώ τούτω, by just this little point ('something,' Tivl).

VII. Also in the case of the poets I found the oracle true,

1. ἐφεξης, to one after another. From this time we may date Socrates' more continuous devotion to teaching his fellow-men, in doing which he incurred the hostility of so many (Int. 26). 2. ότι is declarative after αἰσθανόμενος, and subordinate to this are λυπούμενος and δεδιώς, circumstantial participles of manner, perceiving with grief and apprehension. 3. έδόκει would naturally be a participle (ἡγούμενος), contrasted by  $\delta \epsilon$  with  $\alpha i \sigma \theta \alpha \nu \delta \mu \epsilon \nu o s$   $\mu \epsilon \nu$ . The finite verb makes more prominent Socrates' determination. - Tò Toû θεοῦ, the service of the god. 4. ltéov (elvai) depends on έδόκει. It resumes η α of l. I, the verbal giving the idea of necessity which ἀναγκαΐον in the intermediate clause has brought in. - σκοποῦντι agrees with euol, the dative of the agent, not expressed. - τὸν χρησμόν is, proleptically, outside of the relative clause to which it belongs. 6. vn Tov κύνα, as also in Gorgias, 482 B, μὰ τὸν κύνα τὸν Αἰγυπτίων θεόν, where the dogheaded Anubis is referred to. 9. ἐνδεεῖς is the predicate after elvas, and is modified by τοῦ πλείστου, which in turn is qualified by ὀλίγου δεῖν. Η. 956; G. 1534; B. 642, I; Go. 569. 10. ζητοῦντι κατά τὸν θεόν: his quest was in accordance with the god's command, because only by making it could he learn the real import of the response. 11. ἐπιεικέστεροι, more likely men. 13. πόνους ... πονοῦντος: the allusion is to the toils of Hercules. The participle agrees with the gen. implied in the possessive έμήν. Η. 691; G. 1001; B. 477, note. (App. III.) - καὶ ἀνέλεγκτος, might actually (kal intensive) prove irrefutable. The result was exactly opposite to his expectation and intent. (App. III.) 15. ποιητάς, lit. 'makers.' The verbal idea (followed here by the objective gen.) is stronger in the Greek than in the corresponding English, poets. 20. διηρώτων αν: the imperfect with av denotes the repetition of the action. H. 835; G. 1296; GMT. 162; B. 568; Go. 461, a. So also αν... έλεγον, l. 24. 21. άμα τι καί: Socrates combined a quest for knowledge with his search as to the truth of the oracle (Int. 8). 23, αὐτῶν, than they them-The genitive is after  $\beta \dot{\epsilon} \lambda \tau \iota o \nu$ . 25. ἐν ὀλίγω (χρόνω). 26. ποιοῖεν: in the optative because the verb on which it depends is in the optative. II. 919, a; G. 1439; B. 316; Go. 642, d. 27. φύσει τινί, sort of naturally. So in the Ion, 533 E, Socrates says that the excellent poets compose οὐκ ἐκ τέχνης άλλ' ένθεοι (inspired) όντες καὶ κατεχ δμενοι (possessed). 29. πολλά καὶ καλά: the καί is superfluous in our idiom. 32. σοφωτάτων: the predicate is in the genitive because the participle on which elvar depends is in that case. H. 940, a; G. 931; B. 631; Go. 571, c. 33. ἀνθρώπων is gen. of the whole: α is acc. of specification. 34. τῷ αὐτῷ .  $\omega \pi \epsilon \rho$ , in the very  $(-\pi \epsilon \rho)$  same point in which. (App. III.)

VIII. In the case of the artisans likewise the oracle proved to be true.

1. τελευτῶν: for a list of participles used adverbially, see H. 968, a; G. 1564; GMT. 834; B. 653, note 2; Go. 583, a. 4. τούτου: for the gen. of separation with ψεύδομαι, see H. 748; G. 1117; B. 362, 1; Go. 509. 7. ὅπερ καὶ . καὶ οἱ: in English, one καί has to be omitted and the other translated by also. 10. τὰ μέγιστα refers particularly to affairs of state. Many who had become rich through trade or business were aspiring to direct public affairs (Int. 16). 11. ή πλημμέλεια means originally a mistake in music; here render error. 15. n. or to be both things which they are.

Therefore great enmity has arisen against me as I have kept up this investigation ever since to my pecuniary ruin.

4. λέγεσθαι is in the infin. under the influence of  $\omega \sigma \tau \epsilon$ , although with  $\delta \epsilon$ (corresponding to  $\mu \dot{\epsilon} \nu$ , l. 2) we should have expected έλεγόμην. The subject of the infin. is  $\dot{\epsilon}\mu\dot{\epsilon}$ . If it had been expressed, we should have had σοφόν H. 940; G. 927; B. 631; Go. 571. 5. σοφός is in the nom. just as if we had had έλεγόμην instead of  $\lambda \epsilon \gamma \epsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota$ . —  $\epsilon \ell \nu \alpha \iota$ : the infin. is frequently used in this way after δνομάζειν and similar expressions when the name indicates what the subject is. 7. τὸ δέ, but on the contrary. Literally, 'this, on the other hand,' the sentence which follows being in apposition with  $\tau \delta$ . The correct view now to be stated is contrasted with another previously advanced.  $\tau \delta$  is used here as a demonstrative. 10. και οὐδενός corrects and heightens the force of odlyou tivos, or rather I should say, nothing. - Toût' οὐ λέγειν τὸν Σωκράτη: with this text (instead of τοῦτο λέγειν, see App. III.) Socrates offers this whole explanation as a conjecture. If he had intended to say, "the god evidently does not mean Socrates," we should need to have  $\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \omega \nu$  instead of  $\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \epsilon \iota \nu$ . H. 986; G. 1592; B. 661, note 3; Go. 588, c. The infin.  $\pi \rho o \sigma \kappa \epsilon \chi \rho \hat{\eta} \sigma \theta \alpha \iota$  confirms this view, for with the reading τοῦτο it should be a participle.  $\tau \circ \hat{v} \tau \circ = \sigma \circ \phi \delta v$  λέγειν. Η. 725, α; G. 1073; Β. 340; Go. 536, c. 12. ώσπερ αν εl: with αν, ποίοιτο must be supplied to complete the conclusion. 15. ταῦτα is cognate acc. after (ητω and έρευνω, I make these investigations and inquiries. - uév has in contrast with it  $\delta \epsilon$  in X. l. 1. 17. ἀστῶν καὶ ξένων: the genitives depend on τινά. 18. τώ θεώ βοηθών, bearing aid to the god by proving the oracle true. 21. ἐν πενία μυρία, in extreme poverty. In Xen. Oeconomics II. 3, Socrates says that perhaps he could sell his house and all his other property for five minae. 22. τοῦ θεοῦ is objective gen., where we might have had the dative of the indirect object.

X. Moreover the young men, my followers, have imitated me. The result is this great prejudice, which will be difficult to remove.

3. αὐτόματοι is to be taken with έπακολουθοῦντες. Socrates disclaims responsibility not only for what these young men did, but for their following him at all. He had not sought them as pupils, as the sophists did. That they were the sons of rich men, by arousing class feeling, increased the odium they excited. 4. avroi, among their orun selves. This signification of autol is indicated by the following  $\epsilon l \tau a$ , implying a step in advance, and by the sharp contrast which ἄλλους offers in the next line. We should have expected καί before εἶτα. 9. αὑτοῖς: the real trouble lay, not in the youth who questioned them, but in the men themselves, as is indicated in the context, lines 17, etc. (App. III.) 11. ποιῶν and δίδασκων agree with the subject of διαφθείρει, to be supplied from the preceding line, and are circumstantial, denoting the means. είναι. The two accusatives are after 14. ταῦτα. Lat. ista, is here expressive of contempt. - ὅτι τὰ μετέωρα . . ποιείν: after ὅτι supply διδάσκων διαφθείρει τούς νέους, making τὰ με- $\tau \dot{\epsilon} \omega \rho \alpha$ ,  $\tau \dot{\alpha} \dot{\nu} \pi \dot{\alpha} \gamma \hat{\eta} s$ , and the two infinitives νομίζειν and ποιείν depend on διδάσκων. Or, better, regard ότι as equivalent to quotation marks introducing direct discourse, and the accusatives and infinitives as in apposition with  $\tau \dot{a} \dots \pi \rho \dot{b} \chi \epsilon \iota \rho a \tau a \hat{v} \tau a$ . In this latter way contempt is expressed still more forcibly. 17. κατάδηλοι προσποιούμενοι . . . είδότες: Η. 981; G. 1589; B. 661; Go. 585, a. εἰδέναι may be taken absolutely = to have knowledge, or Ti may be supplied from the following οὐδέν. 18. ἄτε ὄντες, inasmuch as they are. H. 977; G. 1575; B. 656, I; Go. 593, a. 20. Euvτεταγμένως, concertedly. The metaphor is taken from soldiers arrayed in line of battle. (App. III.) 22. kal Μέλητός . ρητόρων: on the accusers, see Int. 26. The classes here mentioned correspond to those Socrates is described as having visited in chaps. VI., VII., and VIII., if we may regard the ρήτορες here as the same with the πολιτικοί of chap. VI. καὶ τῶν πολιτικῶν, l. 25, is added because Anytus, the most influential of the three accusers, was both tanner and πολιτικός. (App. III.) 29. ταῦτ' . . . τάληθη: the article with the predicate indicates the truth promised in I. 16. ύμιν is ethical dative, I assure you. 32. τοῖς αὐτοῖς refers to these very things he has just said so frankly. In this manner he has always spoken to them, and then as now they hated They have thus him for so doing. had an object lesson of the way in which this hatred had sprung up against him. (App. III.)

Here closes the first episode (or second act of the drama), one antagonist, the accusers of long ago, having been discomfited. In the second episode which follows, a second antagonist comes on to meet a like fate.

XI.-XV. DEFENSE AGAINST HIS PRESENT ACCUSERS

In this part of his defense, note that Socrates does not think it worth while to reply directly and specifically to the charges, but he utterly destroys their force and rules Meletus out of court, as it were, by showing that he has no interest in the case. The dramatic value of thus slighting him is very evident (Int. 26 and 31). Later in his speech, in his own time and way, Socrates amply refutes the charges here urged against him.

XI. My present accusers charge me with corrupting the youth and not believing in the gods the city believes in, but in δαιμόνια καινά. Meletus is the real evil-doer, for he brings this suit, although he cares nothing about the matters involved.

2. πρὸς ὑμᾶς, πρὸς δὲ Μέλητον, before you, but against Meletus. See note on II. 2. 3. φιλόπολιν, ώς φησι: implying that few if any others would call him so. 5. αὖθις γὰρ δή άντωμοσίαν, For again now just as though these accusers were a second set, let us in turn take up their indictment. Really there is only one set of formal accusers, but since he has in magination introduced his old-time accusers into court (III. 5, ωσπερουν), the one only actual set becomes as it were a second set. Notice also that the charges of the present accusers are the outgrowth of those earlier attacks and really identical, and so only as it were a second set. 7. πως ώδε: the indictment is not given here in the exact words. Diogenes Laertius says (II. 40) that Favorinus (who wrote a work on Socrates in the time of the emperor Hadrian) reports that the exact form of the indictment as preserved in the Metroon (or temple of Cybele at Athens, where the archives of the city were deposited) was as follows: άδικει Σωκράτης ους μέν ή πόλις νομίζει θεούς οὐ νομίζων έτερα δὲ καινὰ δαιμόνια είσηγούμενος άδικεῖ δὲ καὶ τοὺς νέους διαφθείρων, τίμημα  $\theta \acute{a} \nu a \tau o s$ . Notice that the order of the charges is reversed. 14. σπουδή χαριεντίζεται: literally, 'jests in earnest,' makes a jest of a very serious matter. He jests because the charges he makes are so absurd and inconsistent as to be ridiculous, and vet it is a serious matter because it involves the reputation and life of an innocent man. - ραδίως, lightly. Lat. temere. - εls άγωνα καθιστάς, bringing to trial. 16. ὧν is gen. depending on έμέλησεν. — οὐδέν is an adverbial acc. 18. καὶ ὑμῖν, to you also as well as I understand it myself.

In giving this impersonal answer (οἱ νόμοι), Meletus shows that he vaguely foresees the trap into which Socrates is leading him and tries to avoid it. Socrates sharply brings his nose back to the grindstone in άλλ' οὐ τοῦτο. 15. οἱ δικασταί: Meletus, obliged unwillingly to give a pertinent answer, in this reply curries favor with the judges. He includes the whole six thousand, but in the οίδε which follows (l. 16) Socrates limits it to the number, probably five hundred, actually present and serving Even then, logically, in this case. Meletus in what follows has to include the audience and the five hundred members of the  $\beta ov \lambda \dot{\eta}$ , and then all the ecclesia, and finally everybody, in the number of those who benefit the young. This conversation is a good example of the way in which Socrates, by his method of questioning, would discomfit an adversary. 19. λέγεις is modified first by the adverb  $\epsilon \hat{v}$  and then by the object acc.  $d\phi\theta o\nu l\alpha\nu$ , by  $\kappa\alpha l$ coördinated with the adverb. 22. άλλ' άρα, well now. No preposition, as  $\pi \epsilon \rho l$ , is needed in either case. αὐτὸς . . . νομίζω . . . ἀδικῶ : the direct discourse, instead of acc. and infin. after λέγεις, makes more clear and positive the truth in regard to Socrates' belief. In l. 16, however, we should revert to the indirect, supplying λέγεις νομίζειν, which governs ουσπερ and έτέρους. 20. ίνα τί: supply γένηται. 21. οὐδὲ. . ovoé, not even (ne quidem) . . . nor yet. The sun and the moon have been worshiped not only by the Greeks (under the names of Apollo and Artemis), but by the common consent of almost all peoples from the earliest times. That Socrates did habitually pay reverence to the sun is shown in the Symposium 220 D, where he stands in a brown study all day and the following night until dawn, then προσευξάμενος τώ ήλίω (after a prayer to the sun) he went away. 23. μά, used in strong protestations and oaths, is in itself neither affirmative nor negative, but is made so by prefixing val or ov. Here δρες δικασταί: this form of address, which Meletus here uses, Plato is careful not to put into the mouth of Socrates. See note on I. 1. 24. 'Avaξαγόρου: Anaxagoras of Clazomenae (500-428) is reported (Diog. Laert. II.) as having taught that the sun was μύδρος διάπυρος (a red-hot mass o/ metal), and that the moon, like the earth, had οἰκήσεις καὶ λόφους καὶ φάραγγας (dwellings, ridges, and ravines). This view of the sun Xenophon (Mem. IV. 7, 7) makes Socrates particularly confute. (App. III.) 25. οΰτω qualifies ἀπείρους as well as καταφρονεîs. 27. ούκ είδέναι: ούκ is used instead of un because the infin, in the indirect, regularly with ωστε, stands for the indic. ἴσασι of direct discourse. ούκ represents their ignorance as an actual fact, and so emphasizes the impudence of Meletus's charge. H. 1023, b; G. 1450 and 1451; GMT. 594; B. 431, 2; Go. 564. 29. καὶ δὴ καί, and now in this case. Here, as usually, these words produce a particular instance of a general statement just preceding. Meletus does despise his auditors ( $\kappa \alpha \tau \alpha \phi \rho \rho \nu \epsilon \hat{\imath} s \tau \hat{\omega} \nu \delta \epsilon$ ), because he expects them to believe that the young men learned these things from Socrates. — α . . πριαμένοις: ä refers to the doctrines, not the books, because its antecedent ταθτα can only mean that, and because books at this time probably could not have been bought for a drachma. This is quite different from the wrong inference of Meletus, who claims that when Socrates spoke of τὸ δαιμόνιον (meaning merely some divine agency), he meant some new δαίμων, different from any the city believed in. 23. τοὺς δὲ δαίμονας: this definition is consistent with Greek usage from Homer to Plato. word δαίμων was used to denote either  $\theta \epsilon \delta s$  or a spiritual being inferior to  $\theta \epsilon \delta s$ . Its distinctive meaning as applied to either class is that it denotes such a being in his dealings with men" (Riddell). XVI. Am I not ashamed of a course of life likely now to result in my being put to death?

No good man ought, through fear of death, to think of doing anything uniust.

Achilles would not play the coward to save his life.

The position of αὐτόν is emphatic. 39. πρὸ τοῦ αίσχροῦ, in preference to disgrace. Disgrace is the first thing to be taken into account so as to avoid it. By disgrace Socrates means not ill repute among men, but real dishonor, the opposite οί τὸ καλόν.

In the second we have the optative because it refers to a future action which is regarded as purely theoretical. The conclusion is in view of the combination of these conditions. I then should have perpetrated a terrible crime if, though when the generals stationed me . . . I remained . . . yet when the god ordered that . . . I should desert my post. Potidaea, on the isthmus (1. 8).of Pallene in Macedonia, rose against Athens in 432 B.C. Callias the Athenian general was slain; the city was besieged for two years and finally taken by the Athenians. This affair was one of the immediate occasions of the Peloponnesian war. In the battle at Potidaea Socrates saved the life of Alcibiades (Int. 9). Amphipolis was an Athenian colony on the river Strymon in Thrace. A battle took place there in 422 B.C. in which the Athenians were defeated and their general Cleon was killed. Delium was a sanctuary of Apollo in southeastern Boeotia. At a battle there in 424 B.C. the Athenian general Hippocrates lost his life, and Socrates distinguished himself for coolness and intrepidity. 7. δείν depends upon the idea of commanding in τάττοντος. The reference is of course to the command implied in the oracle of Apollo given to Chaerephon. 9. λίποιμι τὴν τάξιν: λιποταξίου γραφή, an indictment for deserting one's post, the penalty for which was loss of rights of citizenship (ἀτιμία), would be at once suggested to an Athenian by these words. 10. δεινόν ταν είη repeats the δεινά αν είην είργασμένος of 1. I, regarding now as future what there, by the perfect tense, is regarded as past, not absolutely, but with reference to the future indicated in λίποιμι. 13. καὶ οἰόμενος . . . οὐκ ὤν : Socrates here introduces the second reason why no good man would do wrong through fear of death. This would be to assume a knowledge which he has not, namely, that death is an evil. XVIII. If you put me to death, you will injure the city more than you will me.

1. μη θορυβείτε: enraged at the defiance of their power, many of the audience cry out against the speaker. 2. μη θορυβείν is in apposition with the  $\ddot{a}$  contained in ois  $(=\tau \circ \dot{v} \tau \circ \iota s \ddot{a})$ . 3.  $\mathbf{v} \dot{\mathbf{a}} \mathbf{p}$ introduces a reason for ἀκούειν, but γάρ, l. 4, the reason for  $\mu \dot{\eta} \theta o \rho \nu \beta \epsilon \hat{\iota} \tau \epsilon$ , l. 1. 10. θεμιτόν, possible in the nature of things. 11. ανδρί: in the dat. after  $\theta \epsilon \mu \iota \tau \delta \nu$ , where the acc. (subject of the infinitive) might have been used. άποκτείνειε μέντ' αν ίσως, to be sure he (that is, ὁ χείρων of the preceding sentence) might perhaps put him to death. 12. ἀτιμόω means to make ἄτιμος, that is to deprive of civil rights. 13. αλλος Tis mov, many another man doubtless. Literally, 'any other.' 14. ἀλλὰ πολύ μάλλον: understand οἴομαι μέγα κακόν. 15. ἀποκτεινύναι explains à . . . ποιεί. For the form see App. III. 21. γελοιότερον: what is very ridiculous is the comparison of himself to a μύωψ, which idea, although it comes in later, is already suggested in his own mind by this pitch of shamelessness.

the word he is about to use  $(\pi \rho o \sigma \kappa \epsilon i$ - $\mu \epsilon \nu o \nu$ ), for which he apologizes. πρόσκειμαι serves as the passive of προστίθημι, used in 1.25, with the additional idea of urgent persistency, applied to. 24. ὑπὸ μύωπός τινος may mean, by a spur, or by a gadfly. The first meaning is indicated by προσκείμενον, the last by προσκαθίζων (1. 28) and κρούσαντες (1. 32). 26. έγείρων (suggested by ἐγείρεσθαι, l. 24), carrying on the comparison of the μύωψ, is explained by  $\pi \epsilon i \theta \omega \nu$  and  $\partial \nu \epsilon i \delta i \zeta \omega \nu$ , which is what Socrates actually did. 28. προσκαθίζων, settling down on you, as a fly persistently pesters a horse. 31. ἴσως τάχ' ἄν, very likely. — ώσπερ οί νυστάζοντες έγειρόμενοι, just like men waked from a nap by a fly. 32. κρούσαντες, slapping me. the Athenians would do in being persuaded by Anytus, πειθόμενοι 'Ανύτω. For the repetition of av in long sentences, see note on I. 33. 36. With olos the infinitive is often used. 1000; G. 1526; B. 641; Go. 565. 37. οὐ νὰρ ἀνθρωπίνω ἔοικε: having exhausted the idea that he is like a gadfly, Socrates takes up the other part of the conception, given in l. 22, that the god sent him. For it is not like the way men act. Such unselfish devotion to the welfare of others could have had only a divine source. 39. των οἰκείων ἀμελουμένων is the gen, absolute denoting concession. This is more unusual than to neglect one's public duties, referred to in the line preceding. 44. είχον αν τινα λόγον, I should have some reason, and there would be no need of ascribing my course to divine intervention. (App. III.) 46. τοῦτό . . . ἀπαναισχυντήσαι, to attain to cognate acc. and is explained by  $\pi \alpha \rho \alpha$ σχόμενοι μάρτυρα. 49. ίκανόν is in predicate agreement with τὸν μάρτυρα.

Having considered the various phases of the question supposed to be raised by his adversaries in XVI. 11, viz., Are you not ashamed to have so conducted yourself as now to be in danger of being put to death? Socrates supposes a second question to be raised against him:

XIX. Why do I work only in private, never taking part in public affairs? The divine voice prevents me.

Had I gone into public life with my idea of duty, I should quickly have been put to death as an inevitable result.

3. πολυπραγμονώ, am a busybody. Socrates thus characterizes his crossquestioning of men in his endeavor to find out whether the oracle of the god was true. To his enemies his conduct appeared that of an inquisitive meddler. (App. III.) - ού . . . άναβαίνων εls τὸ πληθος: ἀνά in the compound participle refers to going up to the Pnyx, where the meetings of the people  $(\tau \delta \pi \lambda \hat{\eta} \theta o s)$  were held. Socrates felt that his mission of making men better could be fulfilled, not by the enactment of any law or the adoption of any particular measures, but only by dealing with them individually. 6. μολ θεῖόν τι καλ δαιμόνιον γίγνεται, something godlike and divine comes to me. φωνή, though appearing in all the manuscripts, is generally bracketed here because it anticipates unnecessarily the  $\phi\omega\nu\dot{\eta}$   $\tau\iota s$  of 1. 9. On the Socratic Δαιμόνιον, see Int. 10. 7. έν τη γραφη, when Meletus spoke of the ἔτερα καινὰ δαιμόνια. The charge was a perversion of the truth, for Socrates as a divinity, but merely as divine. This perversion Socrates here characterizes as a caricature by his use of the word ἐπικωμφδῶν. 10. τοῦτο is governed by πράττειν. 15. πάλαι: the repetition of this word indicates that just as soon as he should have ventured into public activity, immediately he would have endangered his life. might have begun fifty years before, since the rights and duties of Athenian citizenship began at the age of twenty years. — άπολώλη, ώφελήκη: in the older Attic writers and in Plato the form of the pluperfect in  $\eta$ , instead of  $\epsilon \iota \nu$ , is used. H. 458, a; G. 777, 4; B. 222; Go. 288. 19.  $\pi \lambda \dot{\eta} \theta \epsilon \iota = \delta \dot{\eta} \mu \omega$ , populace. - γνησίως, in a genuine or unfeigned way, honestly. 22. kal el. even if, signifies that the condition is highly improbable. el kai, although, would express a condition which, although not disputed, is represented as of little moment. See XVIII. 21,

XX. Shown by my experience in refusing to vote to try the ten generals together and in my refusing to go after Leon at the bidding of the Thirty.

2. οὐ λόγους, άλλ' . . . ἔργα: Socrates has facts which he proposes to state; he will not includge in the idle declamation or the piteous appeals which the dicasts often hear from defendants. 4. οὐδ' ἄν ένί, not even to any man, is stronger than οὐδενὶ ἄν. 5. μη ὑπείκων δέ, although, if I should not yield. μή shows that the participle is conditional. H. 1025; G. 1612; B. 431, 1; Go. 486.  $\delta \epsilon$  here has a concessive force. (App. III.) 6. φορτικά μέν και δικανικά, vulgar and commonplace. φορτικά from φόρτος (φέρω), a burden. δικανικά = such as are comnever regarded or spoke of this voice monly heard in trials in court. 8. έβούλευσα δέ, but I was elected (inceptive aor.) senator. The senate, or βουλή, consisting of 500 members (50 from each one of the 10 phylae), had for its principal business the preparation of resolutions (προβουλεύματα) to be laid before the ecclesia, or assembly of the people. The 50 members chosen from each tribe presided (πρυτανεύειν) in an order determined by lot, for one tenth of the year, 36 days at least, and while so acting were called πρυτάνεις. One of these 50 each day was chosen by lot ἐπιστάτης, or chief president, who presided at all meetings of the senate and ecclesia. 9. ['Αντιοχίς]: see App. III. - ὅτε: after the victory off the Arginusae islands, 406 B.C. 10. τοὺς δέκα στρατηγούς: of the ten in office at that time only eight were present at the battle, and of those two did not return to Athens, so only six were actually condemned and put to death. See Grote's History of Greece, chap. LXIV. — οὐκ ἀνελομένους: ἀναιρείσθαι is the word regularly used to signify the removal of the dead for burial, after a battle. The generals in this case maintained in their defense that the part of the fleet detailed for this purpose (while the main fleet went after the enemy) had been prevented from accomplishing their task by a storm. The great importance attached to a proper burial of the dead is here made very evident. 11. ἐκ τῆς ναυ- $\mu \alpha \chi (\alpha s)$ , instead of  $\epsilon \nu \tau \hat{\eta} \nu \alpha \nu \mu \alpha \chi (\alpha, be$ cause the idea of removal from or after is also implied. Not only dead bodies are meant, but in this case also those clinging to the wrecks. — παρανόμως, and (2) they were tried ἄθροοι. 12. ώς έν τῷ ὑστέρῳ χρόνφ . . ἔδοξε: according to Xen. Hellenica I. 7, 12, kai οὐ πολλώ χρόνω ὕστερον μετέμελε τοῖς 'Aθηναίοιs. The Athenians passed a decree that Callixenus, who proposed this illegal measure, and his accomplices, should be brought to trial; but they anticipated their sentence by voluntary exile. 13. ήναντιώθην μηδέν ποιείν: this refers to Socrates' refusal as ἐπι- $\sigma \tau \acute{a} \tau \eta s$  on that day to put the question to vote in the ecclesia, which, it would seem, resulted in the adjournment of proceedings to the next day, when a more pliable ἐπιστάτης presided. The negative in  $\mu\eta\delta\epsilon\nu$  is redundant. 1029; G. 1615; B. 434; Go. 572. (App. III.) 14. καὶ ἐναντία ἐψηφισάμην: when Socrates refused to put the question to vote in the ecclesia, they probably appealed to the whole body of prytanes, and in their deliberations Socrates voted against going on with the trial. (App. III.) 15. evδεικνύναι με καὶ ἀπάγειν, to denounce and arrest me. ἔνδειξις was laying information against one who discharged public functions for which he was not legally qualified. The immediate effect of it was to suspend the offender from άπαγωγή (ἀπάγειν) was a summary process by which a person caught in an unlawful act might be arrested by any citizen and led off to prison. See M. and S. pp. 270-294. - τῶν ὑητόρων: these orators held no office, but as they had access to the public ear, they exercised great influence, often, as here, for the bad. 18. n μεθ' ὑμῶν γενέσθαι, than to take sides contrary to law, because (1) they were with you. 21. οί τριάκοντα: after not tried before a jury under oath, but the dicaster at Aegospotami and the in two excited meetings of the ecclesia, capture of Athens by Lysander in

The Thirty now attempted to force Socrates to do through fear something which he regarded as wrong, just as the democracy had in the case of the generals. 22. The θόλος, or Rotunda where the prytanes dined, was used by the Thirty as a banquet bility. hall during their rule. 23. Leon, born gone into voluntary exile to Salamis to avoid falling a victim to the Thirty, who coveted his wealth. For ἀποθνήσκω as passive of ἀποκτείνω, see H. 820; G. 1241; B. 513; Go. 499, a. 26. ἀναπλησαι, like Lat. implere, is used idiomatically of communicating pollution, here to implicate in their crimes (αίτιων). 28. εί μη άγροικότερον ην είπειν, if it were not too boorish to say so. This is apologetical for the extreme expression ὅτι ἐμοὶ θανάτου οὐδ' ότιοῦν, which was μὲν μέλει . . very strong language for a defendant in peril of his life to use to his judges. 30. τούτου δέ is resumptive of τοῦ δέ (l. 29) and makes very prominent Socrates' care to do nothing unjust. τὸ πῶν is adverbial. 31. οὕτως ἰσχυρὰ ovoa, although it was so violent. The later orators affirmed that more than 1500 victims were put to death without trial, by the Thirty. See Grote, chap. LXV. 34. ώχόμην ἀπιών, / went straightway. The imp. of olyopai equivalent to the pluperfect and reinforced by ἀπιών, indicates the prompt fearlessness of Socrates in this great peril. 35. διὰ ταχέων: the rule of the Thirty lasted only eight months, expelled by Thrasybulus and the re- which follow, not singly but taken

1. ἀρ' οὖν: Socrates passes on to at Salamis but a citizen of Athens, had the third question of his opponents by a brief and forcible restatement of the point he has just made. — av . . . H. 895; G. 1397; B. 606; Go. 646. 5. οὐδέ, nor would any other man either. 7. τοιοῦτος is explained by ξυγχωρήσας, l.q. 9. οὕτε ἄλλω οὕτε . . οὐδενί: here again Socrates welds his argument together by gliding almost imperceptibly from one topic to another. See XIV. 5-8, XVII. 13, etc. 11. έμοὺς μαθητάς: Alcibiades and Critias are probably referred to, whose vices were maliciously said to have arisen from the instruction of Socrates. - Socrates never became the διδάσκαλος of any one, in the technical and ordinary sense of the word, just as in 1. 21 he says he never promised μάθημα to any one. He differed in important particulars from the professional teachers of the day. See Int. 14 and 21. 13. τὰ ἐμαυτοῦ πράττοντος, attending to my own business. The sophists, on the contrary, taught when they were paid, and when they were not paid did not teach. 17. ἐρωταν, active where we should use the passive. H. 952, a; G. 1529; B. 641, note. -The conclusion to έαν τις βούληται . . . ἀκούειν is παρέχω έμαυτον ἀκούειν, to be supplied from the line preceding. 18. τούτων is gen. of the whole after ris, which alludes to Alcibiades and Critias. 19. χρηστὸς γίγνεται, turns out good. 20. την αlτίαν ὑπέχοιμι, incur the blame or be responsible.

XXII. If my followers have been corrupted by me, why do not they themselves or their relatives now accuse me? 1. τί δή ποτε. Why then, pray (if I am not a regular teacher with special pupils who pay me). 4. εἶπον refers to what he said in X. 3. - ἀκούοντες and ἐξεταζομένοις are both supplementary to xalpovouv, one agreeing with the subject, the other with the object. H. 980; G. 1578; B. 659; Go. 586, a. 6. οὐκ ἀηδές: Litotes. A piquant way of saying ήδιστον. 8. ἐξ ἐνυπνίων: the importance which Socrates ascribed to visions is illustrated in Crito II. (Int. 10 and 22). 9. кай . . . και ότιοῦν: in the Greek idiom και is used in both clauses where we translate it only in one, anything else whatsoever. - θεία μοίρα, 'divine allotment' or, from the human side, divine will. 11. εὐέλεγκτα, easy to put to the proof or test. 12.  $\chi \rho \hat{\eta} \nu$  . . .  $\kappa \alpha$ τηγορείν: for  $\chi \rho \hat{\eta} \nu$  with  $d\nu$  omitted in a conclusion of unfulfilled obligation, see H. 807; G. 1400, I and 2; GMT. 415; B. 567; Go. 460. Here with the present infinitive  $\chi \rho \hat{\eta} \nu$  has ought (GMT. 417), and the whole conditional sentence is a present particular one. H. 893; G. 1390; B. 602; Go. 647. The condition is a complex one, one part in present (or past) time (διαφθείρω and διέφθαρκα), the other in the past  $(\xi \gamma \nu \omega \sigma \alpha \nu)$ , and the conclusion is in view of the combination of these conditions. Compare XVII. I-IO, where a past and a future condition are combined. 16. el 8é. instead of el Te, introduces an adversative idea which is further emphasized by the intensive αὐτοί, they themselves. 17. τῶν ἐκείνων: the genitive of the demonstrative here has the attributive position as if it were a reflexive. H. 673, b; G. 977, 1; B. 457, 2; Go. 554, a. Here it is in the second attributive position. G. 959, 2. 20. μεμνήσθαι καὶ τιμωρείσθαι: the infinitives depend on  $\chi \rho \hat{\eta} \nu$ , l. 12. See App. III. πάντως δέ, for surely. δέ, here asoften in Homer, is equivalent to γάρ. 22. Κρίτων, Crito was a wealthy friend of Socrates, from whom the dialogue which follows the Apology was named. Critobulus, his son, famous for his beauty, was a frequent companion of Crito and Socrates were Socrates. of the same deme,  $\lambda \omega \pi \epsilon \kappa \dot{\eta}$ , of the tribe 'Αντιοχίς. 23. Lysanias, of the deme  $\Sigma \phi \eta \tau \tau \delta s$  in the tribe 'Aκαμαντίς, was the father of Aeschines (not the orator) called ὁ Σωκρατικός, who wrote Socratic dialogues and became a teacher for money of the Socratic doctrines. 24. Antiphon (not the orator) was of the deme Κηφισιά of the tribe ' $E\rho\epsilon\chi\theta\eta$ is. 25.  $\tau$ oivuv, and then, is transitional, only slightly inferential. — οὖτοι here refers to what follows, contrary to the ordinary statethe force of a present tense = they ments of usage. 26.  $\hat{\epsilon} v \tau \alpha \hat{\nu} \tau \eta \tau \hat{\eta}$

Of Nicostratus and Theodotus we know nothing further. The same may be said of Paralus and Aeantodorus, mentioned in the following lines. Demodocus appears in the Theares and Adimantus in the Republic. Apollodorus is mentioned frequently in Plato and Nenophon. 29. καταδεηθείη, he could not dissuade him, literally, 'ask of him against ' (κατά) what is right or his better judgment. 34. έχρην, like  $\chi \rho \hat{\eta} \nu$ , in l. 12, is a conclusion of unfulfilled obligation with av omitted, here in past time, as the infinitive is in a past tense. 36. παραχωρώ, καὶ λεγέτω: to complete the expression, έν τῷ ἐμῷ υδατι should be added. The time allowed to both plaintiff and defendant was marked by the clepsydra or water clock, made somewhat like a sand glass with a narrow orifice through which the water slowly trickled. 39. τω διαφθείροντι in apposition with έμοί is ironical. 41. γάρ introduces the reason for πάντας βοηθεῖν ἐτοίμους, 1. 38. It is contained in the two clauses beginning  $a\dot{v}\tau o i \mu \dot{\epsilon} \nu$  and  $o i \delta \dot{\epsilon}$ . ### XXIII-XXIV. PERORATION

XXIII. I will not attempt to excite the pity of you judges, for in so doing I should act unworthily of a good Athenian.

2. ἀπολογεῖσθαι, to offer in my defense. 3. αν . . . αγανακτήσειεν . . . εί. . έδεήθη . ποιήσω: the conclusion is in view of the combination of the two conditions, one in past, the other in future time. Here, as in XVII. 1-9, the  $\mu \dot{\epsilon} \nu$  clause, in which is the condition in past time, is entirely subordinate: some one of you may be vexed, if (while he in a less important case entreated the court in various ways, yet) I shall do no one of these things. The second condition ( $\pi o$ .- $\dot{\eta}\sigma\omega$ ) here is stated positively in the indicative, to show Socrates' unwavering determination. — άναμνησθείς έαυτοῦ, remembering his own conduct, implying that some of the dicasts had, at one time or other, been defendants. 4. καὶ ἐλάττω, of much less importance because not involving the life of the defendant. 6. παιδία . Wasps, 566 ff. 9. apa. then, inferenally regarded; literally 'as I should be thought.' See Liddell and Scott, δοκέω, Here closes the main part of the II.5. ing et clause. 'I say "if," for I for my part  $(\mu \dot{\epsilon} \nu)$  do not think it of you. - el 8' ov, but if as i said any one feels so. Supply ὑμῶν τις οὕτως ἔχει. Note the epanalepsis at the end of the parenthesis. —  $\ddot{a}v$  belongs with  $\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \epsilon \iota \nu$ , which represents an optative in the direct discourse. The condition is contained in λέγων. 15. ἐμοί . . . μέν πού TIVES Kai oikeîou, I too doubtless have some relatives. Το μέν, άλλά in l. 20 is adversative. 16. τοῦτο αὐτὸ τὸ τοῦ 'Ομήρου is in apposition with the following clause, just as Homer says, in Odys. XIX. 163, where Penelope asks Ulysses, whom she has not yet recognized, to relate from what race he has sprung. 19. καὶ υίεις, yes, sons. The fact that there are three and that two of them are children shows that Socrates could have made a very effective appeal had he been willing. The names of the three sons were Lamprocles, Sophroniscus, and Menexenus. That the oldest was still a youth when Socrates was seventy indicates that he did not marry till late in life (Int. 22). 24. εί μὲν θαρραλέως: Socrates might have said positively (as the first reason why he will not appeal to the pity of the judges), "I am not afraid to face death," but such bluntness seemed to him not in good taste, so he only suggested it. Compare XX. 28. 25. οὖν here and in 1. 29, at all events, with reference to what precedes by way of confirmation. 26. ού μοι δοκεί: here is a slight change in the structure of the sentence (anacoluthon). We should naturally have a participle. οίδμενος perhaps, co-ordinate with αὐθαδιζόμενος, in 1. 23. The intervening clause άλλ' . . . άλλος λόγος occasions gan at XXIII. 25, here ends, and what the change. 27. τοῦτο τοὕνομα is σοφός, which he says is at any rate applied to him, whether truly or falsely; literally, whether it be true or a lie. 29. δεδογμένον γέ έστι, it is generally regarded. The force of ye can best be given by specially accenting the preceding word. 30. εί . . . τοιοῦτοι ἔσονται is the protasis of a future cond. sentence instead of  $\dot{\epsilon}\dot{\alpha}\nu$  with subjunctive. the indicative making the danger more imminent. This usage is customary in threats and warnings, as here. H. 899; G. 1405; Go. 648, b. 33. οίουσπερ, of just which sort. According to Plutarch, when Aspasia was tried on a charge of ἀσέβεια, Pericles besought the jurymen with tears and secured her acquittal. 35. ώς gives the idea as lying in the minds of the subject, so that oloµévous is really superfluous. We might have had ώs πεισομένους. 36. άθανάτων ἐσομένων is the genitive absolute, although we should look for the acc. as in έργαζομένους. Η. 970; G. 1568; B. 657, note 2. The separate construction here brings the subjects forward more prominently for scorn. 38. και των ξένων, even of strangers who were regarded by the Athenians as inferior to themselves in the sense of propriety and decorum. 41. οὖτοι: this repetition makes the subject very prominent. 42. ταύτα and ύμας are two accs, after ποιείν (H. 725, a; G. 1073; B. 340; Go. 536, c), of which the subject is Tous δοκοῦντας . . . εἶναι. See App. III. XXIV. Also I should act unjustly and impiously.

II (where to live without cross-examining men is regarded as  $\kappa \alpha \kappa \delta \nu$ ), and which from the outset Socrates has made the main principle in fixing his own penalty. 16. yap introduces the reason of what is implied in the line preceding, namely, 'Anything that is not really bad I am willing to accept,' for, if I had money, I would propose as my penalty as large a fine as I should be likely to pay. 17. όσα εμελλον εκτείσειν is an apodosis with a omitted. To pay money would not be a real κακόν. 18. εί μη αρα, unless perchance. The conclusion to this condition is to be supplied after νῦν δέ, but now I do not name any sum of money. The apparent contradiction in Socrates saying first that he has no money and | because when he had been sent with then fixing his penalty at a money thirty triremes to save Pylos from the

Here the judges vote the penalty of death, and the formal trial is at an end. According to Diogenes Laertius (II. 5) the majority against Socrates was eighty votes greater than on the question of his guilt. Some delay on the part of the officers gives to him the opportunity to speak these last words to those judges who chose to remain and listen. Rarely would a man condemned to die have the equanimity, if he had the opportunity, so to speak.

The circumstances under which this dialogue took place are explained in Int. 34.

Title, KPIT $\Omega$ N. This name of a person given by Plato himself to this Dialogue reminds us of the titles of the Greek tragedies, and was doubtless selected with reference to the dramatic form of the work. [ $\mathring{\eta}$  περὶ πρακτέου,  $\mathring{\eta}$ θικόs]: See on the sub-title to the Apology, p. 117.

For the reason why a list of the dialogi personae is prefixed, as to a play, see Int. 3 and 36.

The introduction is the dramatic prologue and is entirely dramatic in form, the conversation being given directly. In it the characters are introduced, and the situation is developed.

- I.-II. INTRODUCTION. Socrates must die on the third day.
- I. (Crito coming to the prison early in the morning, when Socrates awakes, says\ O Socrates, what a fortunate disfosition you have, in that you can now sices so sweetly. To-morrow probably you will be fut to death.
- 1. Κρίτων, Crito is mentioned twice in the Apology; as a contemporary and fellow-demesman of Socrates, in XXII. 22, as a wealthy friend, in XXVIII. 22. —  $\ddot{\eta}$ : the disjunctive in the direct question following a general question suggests the answer thereto. So also 4. πηνίκα, what hour, is more explicit than  $\pi \delta \tau \epsilon$ . —  $\mu \hat{\alpha} \lambda \iota \sigma \tau \alpha$  is used as with numerals to indicate that only an approximation (though as near 1. 'deep,' as if going back from sunrise far into the beginning of light. 7. ὑπακοῦσαι, to let you in, literally, 'to hear to you' when you knocked; used of a janitor. The marvel was that Crito was admitted so early. 9. καί τι καὶ εὐεργέτηται ὑπ' ἐμοῦ, and, besides, he has received a trifle from me. Ti is cognate acc. of the neut. pronoun, retained in the passive. H. 725, c; G. in questions often expresses wonder, as here. 16. έν τοσαύτη . . λύπη, at once so sleepless and so distressed. The position of  $\tau \dot{\epsilon}$  shows that  $\tau o \sigma a \dot{\nu} \tau \eta$ is to be taken both with άγρυπνία and λύπη. 17. άλλὰ καί, but furtherdid not wake Socrates. 18. ἐπίτηδες, in the subj. instead of opt. though after bracketed (App. III.), a past tense, the time when Crito conceived the purpose being indicated. H. SSI, a; G. 1369; GMT. 318; B. 074; 059, a. 20. τοῦ τρόπου is gen. of cause, which relation is expressed at the end of the sentence by the clause with ωs, equivalent to ὅτι οὕτως. 23. πλημμελές, inconsistent, from πλήν and µέλοs, 'out of tune,' not in harmony with his advanced years. 27. μη oùxí: the double negative because ἐπιλύεται (used in the sense of preventing) has a negative force. II. 1034, a; G. 1616; GMT. 811; B. 435; Go. 572, a. Had the construction, τοῦ with the infinitive, been used, the negative would have been omitted. 29. alla to shi, but whi, pray? returns to the question of line 33. ἐν τοῖς (supply φέρουσιν) as possible to the exact truth) is in- strengthens the superlative. 34. τίνα 5. βαθύς, early, literally ταύτην: the full expression would be τίς ἔστιν αύτη ἡ ἀγγελία ἢν φέρεις; - τὸ πλοῖον: the sacred ship, in the absence of which the city was kept ceremonially clean, and no condemned criminal might be put to death. Int. 34 and Phaedo I. The words ob . .  $\mu\epsilon$  were not necessary for Crito, but are inserted for the reader. 36. μέν has no  $\delta \epsilon$  corresponding to it. isolated  $\mu \dot{\epsilon} \nu$  is often used to give 1239; B. 340, 1; Go. 536, c. 13. είτα force to assertions made by a person respecting himself in which opposition to other persons is implied. 38. Σουνίου: "Sunium's marbled steep" (Byron's Isles of Greece) is the southern headland of Attica, on which are now the ruins of a temple more, adding another reason why he of Athena. It is about twenty-five miles from Athens. — ἐκ τούτων, repurposely. The purpose is indicated peating the έξ ων of l. 37, must refer by the "va which follows. 19.  $\delta \iota \dot{\alpha} \gamma \eta s$ , to things, and so  $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu \dot{\alpha} \gamma \gamma \epsilon \lambda \omega \nu$  is

II. Judging from the dream I have just had, my execution will not take place till the day after to-morrow.

1. τύχη ἀγαθη, may fortune favor it, a form often used by the Greeks to invoke a blessing upon a course of action, like Lat. quod bene vertat. H. 776; G. 1181. Socrates' hopeful spirit is contrasted by άλλά with the sorrowful tone in which Crito has spoken. 5. yap introduces the first step in the reason why he does not think ήξειν αὐτὸ τήμερον. The second is 'I am sure from my dream that I am not to die till day after to-morrow.' Therefore the ship will not come till tomorrow. 7. γέ τοι δή is affirmative with some restrictions, 'At all events they say so who have control of these matters' (referring to the Eleven). 8. τοίνυν, well then. - ἐπιούσης ἡμέpas refers to the oncoming day in whose dawn they are. 9. της έτέρας is the other of two, so not 'to-day' but to-morrow. 11. γυκτός is gen. of time.  $\delta \lambda \ell \gamma o \nu \pi \rho \delta \tau \epsilon \rho o \nu$  is inserted to indicate that the dream was after midnight, and so to be regarded as true. - καl κινδυνεύεις ... με, and probably (implying that possibly the dream may have come before Crito reached the prison) very opportunely you did not awake me. 13. δη τί, what, pray? 15. λευκά: white garments are generally ascribed to supernatural appearances. Matt. xxviii. 3, "His countenance was like lightning and his raiment white as snow." 17. ήματί... ίκοιο: from Iliad IX. 363, only there the last word is ikolunv. They are the words of Achilles, who in his anger at Agamemnon declares that he will return to his home in Thessaly, a two days' gards them as applying to his passage "from this place here to another." Apol. XXXII. 6. 19. μèν οὖν (Lat. immo vero) corrects by conceding still more, say rather.

Here ends the dramatic prologue. The next three chapters, in which the discussion begins, are the second act in this dialectic drama.

III.-V. CRITO URGES SOCRATES TO ESCAPE FROM PRISON

III. If you refuse, the multitude will blame us as caring for money more than for you.

1. yé, yes, as often in replies. 2. ἔτι καὶ νῦν, implying that he has often been importuned, but still there is opportunity. 3. οὐ μία, not one only, but twofold, as he goes on to specify. 4. του έστερησθαι: see App. III. 5. οὐδένα μή with the fut. expresses emphatic negation. 1032; G. 1360; B. 569, 2; Go. 489, b. 6. ώs . . . ών, although I was able, they would say, to save you. (really repeating the  $\delta\delta\xi\omega$  of 1.6) implies that what is said in the concessive ων would be true only in the view of the many, and not really so. This suggests the contrariness to reality which we need in the conclusion of the condition  $\epsilon i \ \eta \theta \epsilon \lambda o \nu$ . This conclusion wv is, being equivalent to nv with av omitted. H. 897; G. 1400; GMT. 416 and 479; B. 567, I; Go. 460. 8, αἰσχίων . . ταύτης . . . η η δοκείν: a gen. of a demonstrative after a comparative may be explained by a clause introduced by #. Notice the redundancy. 17. αὐτά ... νυνί, ὅτι, for the present situation itself is clear, sail across the Aegean. Socrates re- that. δέ, as often in Homer, is equiva-plies that nothing more is needed than Socrates' own present situation to establish what Crito contends for. There is a slight anacoluthon in ori ... είσίν, the sentence continuing as if  $\delta \eta \lambda o \hat{i}$  (as some read) had preceded (App. III.). 19. τὰ μέγιστα: Crito cannot view death as Socrates does. See Apol. XXXII. 21. el yàp űdehov expresses a wish which cannot be attained. H. 871, a; G. 1512; GMT. 734; B. 588, 2; Go. 470, b. It is really a condition contrary to reality. 22. "va . ήσαν: the purpose is unattainable, depending upon a wish past attainment. II. 884; G. 1371; B. 590, note 4; Go. 642, c. 24. οὕτε . . . Φρόνιμον οὕτε ἄφρονα: the multitude cannot make one wise or foolish. They are unable to affect character. In Socrates' view life and death are of small account compared with the loss of integrity. 26. With τύχωσι supply  $\pi o \iota o \hat{v} \nu \tau \epsilon s$ . The multitude are controlled by impulse, not principle.

IV. Do not be anxious about the expense. It will cost little to procure escape. The informers can be bought off for a trifle. Other friends will assist if you dislike to use so much of my property. Nor be anxious what you can do, or where go.

2. ἀρά γε μή, Surely you are not (are you). ἀρα μή calls for a negative answer, while  $\gamma \epsilon$  by its emphasis implies that even though he may deny it Crito really has this anxiety. 4. παρέχωσιν: the present subjunctive represents that the informers may make trouble continuously. The aorist subjunctives refer to momentary actions. 6. καί before πασαν intensifies it, even; cal of πραγμα. — έξον σωθήναι, acc.

lent to γάρ. The intensive αὐτά im- 8. ἔασον αὐτὸ χαίρειν, dismiss it, that is, this anxiety. Literally, 'suffer it to say χαίρε,' or bid farewell. 14. μήτε ... φοβοῦ is resumed (after all the grounds for fear have in the meantime been shown to be baseless) by μήτε φοβούμενος of l. 25, after which comes the corresponding  $\mu \dot{\eta} \tau \epsilon$  in 1. 26. 18. ἐπ' αὐτούς, so far as they are concerned. In Xen. Mem. II. 9, I we are told that Crito had been harassed by frivolous lawsuits, the bringers of which he had bought off in order to avoid trouble. - ool by its position is very emphatic, implying that for Socrates Crito is ready to expend all he has. 22. καὶ κεκόμικεν, has actually brought. Simmias and Cebes, both Thebans, appear prominently in the Phaedo. 25. μήτε . . . άποκάμης, neither hesitate, literally, 'grow weary,' not as though Socrates had already made efforts to escape, which is absurd and besides would call for a participle instead of the infinitive  $\sigma \hat{\omega} \sigma \alpha i$ , but in the sense of a strong demand for earnest action. GMT. 903, 3. (App. III.) 27. ὅ τι χρῷο σαυτῷ, what to do with yourself. The reference here is to what Socrates said in Apol. XXVII. 32 ff. χρώο represents the subjunctive of deliberation in direct discourse. II. 866, 3 and 932, 2; G. 1358 and 1490; GMT. 186; B. 673; Go. 661. 28. καὶ ἄλλοσε, elsewhere too as well as here. The idea of motion in what follows reverts and gives form to άλλοσε.

V. If you refuse, you will destroy yourself and neglect your children and lay us open to the charge of cowardice.

2. σαυτόν προδούναι is epexegetiin next line before άλλο τι, it is also. see note on Apol. XII. 5.

8. οίχήσει καταλιπών, you will go and abandon. - το σον μέρος, pro tua parte, quod ad te attinet. 718, c; G. 1058; B. 336; Go. 540. - With τύχωσι supply πράττοντες. 9. τοῦτο is used adverbially with πράξουσιν, as often are εθ and κακώς with Also see ἀγαθόν in Apol. XXXI. 29. — 11. γάρ gives the reason ος τούς υίεις . . . δοκείς προδιδόναι, 1. 6. 15. φάσκοντά γε δή especially when you assert. By supplying  $\sigma \dot{\epsilon}$ , rather than  $\tau \iota \nu \dot{\alpha}$ , as the subject of  $\alpha i \rho \epsilon \hat{\iota} \sigma \theta \alpha \iota$ , with which φάσκοντα agrees, the argument is brought to bear directly on Socrates, and that is what Crito intends.  $\gamma \epsilon$  by intensifying φάσκοντα suggests that the assertion needs to be accompanied by the appropriate action.  $\delta \dot{\eta}$  expresses what follows a fortiori, above all, especially. 17. un because the idea of fear is implied in alσχύνομαι. 18. απαν τὸ πρᾶγμα has in apposition with it as parts, ή εἴσοδος, ὁ ἀγών, and τὸ τελευταίον. 20. έξον μη είσελθείν: Socrates, according to a law mentioned by Lysias (X. 17), might have gone into voluntary exile, or perhaps Crito and his friends might have kept the case out of court by raising legal technicalities. 21. ὁ ἀγών, the conduct of the trial as it came off, literally, 'the struggle.' 22. ώσπερ κατάγελως της πράξεως, like a farcical conclusion of the whole matter. It seems absurd to Crito that Socrates should go on and die when in his opinion it would be so easy to have avoided it. 23. διαπεφευγέναι ήμας δοκείν: two constructions are suggested: (1) That these words are in epexegetical apposition to τὸ τελευταίον, ήμας being the subject of δοκείν, and διαπεφευγέναι having κίνδυνον (to

there is no change of structure in the sentence, and (2) that δοκείν repeats the  $\delta\delta\xi\eta$  of l. 17, but is assimilated to the near infinitive,  $\dot{\eta}\mu\hat{a}s$  being the object of διαπεφευγέναι. In this case the anacoluthon, arising from agitation of feeling, must occur after κατάγελως, or it would be in the accusative. The latter of the two explanations gives a better meaning to τὸ τελευταΐον, viz. the ending of the trial in Socrates' death, and also accounts for the repetition of ανανδρία τη ήμετέρα. 25. εξ τι . . . ὄφελος ήν. See Apol. XVI. 16. 29. βεβουλεύσθαι, to have decided. GMT. 109. 30. εί... περιμενουμέν: in future conditions el with the future is still more vivid than έάν with the subjunctive, and is used in threats and warnings. See Apol. XVII. 75 and XXIII. 30.

Here ends the first episode or second act of the dialogue considered as a drama.

VI.-X. Socrates justifies his Refusal

VI. We ought to consider not what will happen to us, but what it is right to do, and so the opinion of the best men.

22. ἄσπερ κατάγελως τῆς πράξεως, like a farcical conclusion of the whole matter. It seems absurd to Crito that Socrates should go on and die when in his opinion it would be so easy to have avoided it. 23. διαπεφευγέναι ημάς δοκεῖν: two constructions are suggested: (1) That these words are in epexegetical apposition to τὸ τελευταίον, ἡμᾶς being the subject of δοκεῖν, and διαπεφευγέναι having κίνδυνον (to be supplied) as its object, in which case the serious danger he is in does not influence Socrates to deviate one iota from the fixed principles of his whole life, and to which Crito has always given hearty assent. 13. où μή with the subjunctive (Plato always uses ξυγχωρήσομαι for the future) is most emphatic negation. See note on Apol. XVII. 43. — πλείω . . . ήμας μορμολύττηται, frighten us with more bugbears (lit. Mormos). πλείω is a cognate acc. of neut. adjective. Μορμώ was a hideous she-monster used by nurses to frighten children with. 15. θανάτους: in the plural denoting violent death. 18. δν σύ λένεις refers to what Crito has said in III. 4-11 and V. 17-26. 22. apa, of course, is ironical, as is also the preceding question. - άλλως: otherwise than it should be, to no purpose. 26. ώδε: that is, in danger of death. 28. vûv 8ή, just now. 29. as is cognate acc. 30. Séou: opt. in orat. 32. όσα γε τάνθρώπεια, ίπ all human probability. The antecedent (to be supplied) of ὅσα is an acc. of specification. 33. auplov is strange, as it is not in accord with the conviction wrought by his dream in Socrates' mind. 37. οὐδὲ . . . τῶν δ' ου. See App. III. 45. πως δ' ου; how can it but be, it must be so.

The chapters which follow furnish an example of the inductive method of which Aristotle says that Socrates was the discoverer. From what is generally admitted as to the body he arrives at the desired truth in regard to the soul. The Apology and the Crito, owing to the nature of their subject matter, do not contain as frequent examples of this inductive method as do many other of the Dialogues of Plato (Int. 19).

VII. The opinion of the one who knows ought to be regarded, not that of the many.

1. av, again. The substance of another conversation follows. 2. τοῦτο πράττων indicates that the man is exercising carefully in accordance with the rules of the art and not casually. 5. laτρός has to do with έδεστέον γε καὶ ποτέον, l. 12, παιδοτρίβης with πρακτέον καὶ γυμναστέον, l. 11. 12. γέ in a series of words indicates the beginning of a new class different from what has gone before, ves and. 18. μηδέν not οὐδέν because the participle ἐπαϊόν- $\tau\omega\nu$  (with which the article before  $\pi o \lambda \lambda \hat{\omega} \nu$  is also to be taken) has the force of a conditional relative clause, and of whoever does not know. H. 1025, a; G. 1612; B. 431; Go. 486. 26. Kal δη καί, and in particular also, introduces the point with which the induction is to end. Notice the double chiastic arrangement of the adjectives which follow. 34. έγίγνετο and ἀπώλλυτο are in the imperfect to indicate the result of previous discussions. This is sometimes called the philosophic imperfect. They are really equivalent to γίγνεσθαι and ἀπόλλυσθαι ἐλέγετο. H. 833; GMT. 40; B. 527, note.

VIII. Life is not worth living with the soul ruined as it will be if we give heed to anything but the truth. That the many can kill us does not alter this fact.

3. The position of μή suggests a clause not expressed, ἀλλὰ τῆ τῶν μἡ ἐπαϊοντων δόξη. The negation is in this way emphasized. 4. ἄρα βωστὸν . . ἐστιν, is life worth the living? 10. ἀλλὰ . . ἄρα, Well then. The inference is from the less to the greater. The negative answer is overwhelmingly implied. 11. & though in construction conformed to λωβάται belongs also to δυίνησιν. 13. ὅ τι ποτ' ἐστί: it (the  $\psi v \chi \dot{\eta}$ ) was not mentioned above (VII. 30), and is left for each one to supply here. 18. apa introduces the conclusion with which this inductive process ends. — ούτω, so as Crito has suggested. 19. 76, 8 71: this change to the indefinite relative in an ind. question is not unusual in Plato. 21. ἡ ἀλήθεια: the truth is regarded as  $\delta \epsilon \pi \alpha i \omega \nu$  who tells, as the result of careful inquiry, what course is the best, or most just as it is termed in what follows. 25. οἶοί τε . . . ἀποκτεινύναι: in order to hasten the progress of the argument Socrates here introduces the very strongest objection (which Crito has already mentioned, III. 18 and 19) to doing what the truth directs, and claims that it does not affect the case. The principle abides, nevertheless. 26. καί, too, indicates that in Crito's mind there are other objections beside this. See chap. IV. (App. III.) 29. ἔτι μένει: it had been agreed in some former talk, here merely alluded to, that the just life alone was worth living. This is the subject of discussion in the Pro-33. τὸ δὲ εὖ . . . ταὐτόν tagoras. έστιν: the distinction here made is necessary because  $\epsilon \hat{v}$  ( $\hat{\eta}_{\nu}$  is ambiguous, as in our expression 'to live well.'

IX. What the truth or justice bids in regard to my escaping from prison is what we ought to do, and that alone. Either refute this or admit it and act accordingly.

4. εί δὲ μή after ἐὰν μέν merely as a formula of contrast and without reference to anything else. H. 906, a; σκέψειs is the antecedent but it is drawn into the relative clause which comes first. The article in such cases generally falls away. The corresponding demonstrative ταῦτα is attracted into the gender of its predicate. 7. μη ...  $\vec{\eta}$ : the subjunctive with  $\mu \dot{\eta}$  expresses a cautious assertion, I suspect these may prove to be considerations. This is a milder way of saying ταῦτα σκέμματά ἐστιν, strengthened by ώς άληθως. See Apol. XXIX. 33. 8. καὶ άναβιωσκομένων γ' αν, yes! and would bring to life again. Yé emphasizing the preceding word shows the entire capriciousness of the multitude. avaβιώσκω is usually intransitive. ἄν with ἀναβιωσκομένων forms the apodosis. GMT. 479, 3. 9. τούτων τῶν πολλῶν, standing at the close in apposition, has a sort of contemptuous force. 10. ὁ λόγος . aipeî, reason thus determines, ratio evincit. This is through the technical use of aipeiv, 'to convict.' This expression is in strong contrast with οὐδενὶ ξὺν νῷ, l. 9. 13. αὐτοί: the intensive brings out clearly that both Crito and Socrates would do wrong as well as those hired. 20. τί δρώμεν, what can we do? The subjunctive of appeal. H. 866, 3; G. 1358; B. 577; Go. 471. although he assents to Socrates' reasoning, cannot bring his mind to accept the situation.  $\pi \circ \lambda \lambda \acute{\alpha} \kappa \iota s \lambda \acute{\epsilon} \gamma \omega \nu$ , l. 23. shows that Socrates understands that Crito by this question is still clinging to the thought that in some way Socrates must be got out of prison. 26. πείσας σε has its antithesis in άλλὰ μὴ ἄκοντος, but not if you are unwilling. — ταῦτα refers to the course Socrates proposes to pursue. 27. Ths G. 1417; B. 616, 3; Go. 656, c. 5. τάς σκέψεως την άρχην, the principle which underlies our inquiry. See X. 42. - | sentiment found its highest positive and 493; B. 613; Go. 055.

Compare άρχώμεθα ἐντεῦθεν, 1. 39. 48. τὸ μετὰτοῦτο, that which comes next, denoting not logical sequence (as έκ τούτου would), but temporal. It is given in the question which follows. 49.  $\tau \hat{\omega}$ : the indefinite here is important as representing in this case the Laws ἐκκεχυμέναι είσίν: this repeated use soon to be introduced. 50. ποιητέον, of the disjunctive question (each alter-though a passive verbal, governs the native depending on the preceding antecedent of a (ταῦτα to be supclause) indicates that Crito delays to plied). > XI.-XVI. THE LAWS ENFORCE THE ARGUMENT OF SOCRATES

XI. The Laws might claim that by tion on Crito's part, which δή would escaping you are trying to destroy them

1. ἐκ τούτων: Socrates now proceeds to apply to the case in hand the general principles just established. 4. ois is assimilated to the object of ἐμμένομεν, since ὡμολογήσαμεν takes the acc. See X. 49. 7. οὐ γὰρ ἐννοῶ: Crito's inability to understand and reply seems to rise from his fear of what will follow if he does. answer of Crito's gives occasion to Socrates to pass over to a new treatment of the matter. 8. ἡμῖν is to be taken with ἐπιστάντες, l. 11. 9. Since άποδιδράσκειν was generally used of runaway slaves and so might be obnoxious to Crito, the expression is softened by the clause which follows. 10. τὸ κοινὸν τῆς πόλεως, the commonwealth, 'the community of the city.' 11. ὧ Σώκρατες: this change from ήμιν, l. 8, indicates that Socrates feels that he is individually responsible, mainly, in this matter. 12. αλλο τι η: for this interrogative expression, which distinctly expects the answer yes, see note on Apol. XII. I. 14. τὸ σὸν μέρος = καθ' ὅσον δύνασαι, ΧΙΙ. 33, so far as you can. 15. etc. elvar, longer to exist. The sure ruin of a city in which the laws are disregarded is brought out by this positive statement of it, followed by the negative. 19. ἄλλως τε καὶ ῥήτωρ: by these words Socrates hints that he has not the gifts or training in public speaking of professional orators, - and his opponents he includes in that class (Apol. I.). The tricks of public speech he may not have had, but the argument he is now making is consummately put. 20. ύπὲρ τούτου ... ἀπολλυμένου, in behalf of this law which is threatened with destruction. The pres. and imper. of  $d\pi \delta \lambda \lambda \nu \mu \iota$  have apposition to the subject of  $\eta \sigma \theta a$ , press often this idea of threatened action. In Athens if any one proposed to change or repeal a law, it was the custom to appoint advocates (συνήγοροι) to defend it. 22. ὅτι introduces here direct discourse, and is equivalent to quotation marks. See note on Apol. XVI. 14. — ἠδίκει: see App. III. — γάρ, yes, for. Assent is here implied to the accusation made above. and a reason is advanced for it.

XII. But the Laws are our benefactors and we must not retaliate when we think they are wronging us, any more than we should upon parents.

2. ταῦτα refers to the idea contained in the answer just given, that if we think the city is treating us wrongly, we in turn may wrong it. 3. ἐμμένειν is the subject of ώμολόγητο to be repeated in thought. 6. ἐπειδη καί: Socrates represents the Laws as pursuing his own method in argument. (Int. 21.) 11. τούτοις is to be taken with μέμφει. 13. άλλά introduces a second consideration, and is instead of an έπειτα δέ answering to πρώτον  $\mu \dot{\epsilon} \nu$ , 1. 8. 17.  $\dot{\epsilon} \nu$  μουσική καὶ γυμναστική: μουσική in its broader sense included elementary studies (γράμ- $\mu \alpha \tau \alpha$ ), music in the stricter sense, and a knowledge of the poets; in a word, all the branches of a liberal education. γυμναστική was the whole system of exercise and diet by which bodily well-being was promoted. (Int. 7.) 21. δοῦλος connotes the entire and unquestioning obedience as of a slave to a master, involving a certain loss of individual freedom, which in Socrates' view the citizen is bound to yield in order that the state may exist. - αὐτός, πρόγονοι, in epexegetical repeated in the adversative clause, 1. 30, because in that clause the inconsistency comes to view. 28. οὖτε . . . ούτε: in our idiom we should expect  $\tau \dot{\epsilon} \dots \dot{\tau} \dot{\epsilon}$ . The negatives are under the influence of οὐκ ἐξ ἴσου ἢν, but cannot be introduced in translation. άντιλέγειν and άντιτύπτειν are explanatory of άντιποιείν. - κακώς άκούοντα is equivalent to λοιδορούμενον. 35. δ . . . ἐπιμελόμενος, added in emphasis and irony, which is expressed again in ουτως, 1. 36. 39. έν μείζονι μοίρα, in higher estimation; literally, 'in a greater portion' of respect due. Connect closely with mapá. 40. σέβεσθαι: the subject is τινά, to be supplied. 44. ἐάν τε τύπτεσθαι ἐάν τε δεῖσθαι: the infinitives depend on  $\pi \rho o \sigma$ - $\tau \acute{a}\tau \tau \eta$  and are explanatory of  $\pi \alpha \theta \epsilon \hat{\imath} \nu$ .  $-\epsilon \acute{a}\nu \tau \epsilon \kappa \tau \lambda$ . in l. 45 brings in the idea of military service, in which entire obedience is requisite, leading up to the claim in  $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$  δικαστηρί $\omega$ , l. 48, that there likewise the state demands entire obedience. 46. ποιητέον ταῦτα. like σέβεσθαι δεί, l. 40, brings back the sentence again, after the specification of intervening details, to its connection with  $\omega \sigma \tau \epsilon \lambda \epsilon \lambda \eta \theta \epsilon \nu \sigma \epsilon$ , l. 36. See note on X. 50. 50.  $\pi \epsilon i \theta \epsilon i \nu$ : supply  $\delta \epsilon i$ , the idea of which is contained in the preceding verbals in  $-\tau \ell o \nu$ , and so it is not written. GMT. 925.

XIII. Moreover, when you became a citizen, you virtually agreed to do whatsoever the Laws might command. 3. δίκαια: predicate after â . . . ἐπιχειρείς. 6. όμως: it might be thought that the city had already done enough to establish its claim upon the obedithe obligation home more emphatically. 7. προαγορεύομεν τώ . . . πεποιηκέναι, 25. apa has an ironical force. It is we publicly proclaim by giving permission. Upon προαγορεύομεν depends έξειναι . . . dπιέναι, l. 10, έξειναι repeating the idea of έξουσίαν. 8. ἐπειδάν δοκιμασθη, when he shall have passed the (δοκιμασία or) examination, especially in regard to his Athenian parentage, which at the completion of his eighteenth year a young man had to pass before he could have his name entered on the register of his deme (ληξιαρχικόν γραμματεΐον) and become an Athenian citizen. 10. ἐξεῖναι . . . άπιέναι is the conclusion, the conditions of which are in  $\delta o \kappa \iota \mu \alpha \sigma \theta \hat{\eta}$ (and ἴδη), ἀρέσκωμεν, and βούληται 11. ούδεις . . . άπαγορεύει: by repeating the statement of the preceding sentence in this negative form, the freedom of the young man in becoming enrolled as a citizen is emphasized. 13. els άποικίαν . . . μετοικείν: the Athenian who went to an Athenian colony, as to Thurii or Amphipolis, became a citizen there; but a μέτοικος resided as an alien in the city he chose to settle in. — εί μη ἀρέσκοιμεν: the optative implies the improbability that Athens would not be pleasing. 22. πείθεσθαι rather than πείσεσθαι, although after a verb of a future signification (see ποιή- $\sigma \epsilon \iota \nu$ , l. 19), because here it is implied that the obedience begins at the very moment of the agreement. GMT. 136. 24. προτιθέντων ήμῶν: supply from the context  $\hat{\eta}$   $\pi \epsilon i \theta \epsilon \sigma \theta \alpha i$   $\hat{\eta}$   $\pi \epsilon i \theta \epsilon i \nu$ , which is equivalent to alpeau, although we set before him the choice. Socrates uses every form of statement to emphasize the entire freedom with which the citizen has covenanted to obeythe Laws.

XIV. You, Socrates, most of all ence of the citizen, but nevertheless. agreed to this, because more than any one else you have liked the city and remained in it, and that for seventy years.

1. και σέ, you in particular. και introduces a particular instance. The last chapter was general; this is the special application of the general truth to the case in hand, which is aggravated by several circumstances. 2. Taîs altíais ἐνέξεσθαι, will make yourself liable to these charges. 3. ἐν τοις μάλιστα: see I. 33. 10. αν . . . έπεδήμεις: the sentence begins as a conditional one, but as it advances (in  $\dot{\epsilon}\dot{\epsilon}\hat{\eta}\lambda\theta\epsilon$ s, l. 12,  $\dot{\epsilon}\pi$ οιήσω, l. 15, and  $\dot{\epsilon}\lambda\alpha$ - $\beta \epsilon \nu$ , l. 16) the force of  $\alpha \nu$  disappears and the statements become positive. 12. ἐπὶ θεωρίαν, to be a spectator of the public games, namely, the Olympian, Pythian, Isthmian, and Nemean, to which men went from all parts of Greece. 13. ὅτι μή, except. The verb is not expressed. GMT. 550. See App. III. 14. στρατευσόμενος: for Socrates' military campaigns, see Int. 5 and 9. 17. είδέναι, added epexegetically, makes the gen. πόλεως seem proleptic. 20. καί . . . ἐποιήσω is no longer dependent on ωμολόγεις, but starts immediately from τά τε ἄλλα. 21. ἐξῆν: for av omitted in this conclusion, see H. 897; G. 1400; B. 567, 1; Go. 460. So also in l. 41. Socrates might have proposed exile instead of a fine of thirty minae. Apol. XXVIII. 23. 24. ἐκαλλωπίζου, you prided yourself. lit. ' made the face beautiful.' - ώς οὐκ άγανακτών, on not caring, as you claimed, is shows that the claim is the assertion of Socrates. The context implies that the Laws regard the claim as insincere. GMT. 864 and 865. 34. φῶμεν is subj. of deliberation or appeal, as is also όμολογωμεν in l. 35. Compare XII. 13. 8. εὐνομοῦνται

35. ἄλλο τι ή distinctly expects the answer yes. So also in l. 37. See note on Apol. XII. I and Crito XI. 12. 38. πρὸς ἡμᾶς αὐτούς, between us. 44. ας δη έκαστοτε: in the writings of Plato (Repub. 544 and Protag. 342). Socrates is represented as speaking well of the discipline of these two states, both Doric in origin. So in Xenophon (Mem. III. 5 and IV. 4) Socrates expresses admiration for Lacedaemon on account of the strict observance of the laws by its citizens. 46. ἐλάττω . . . ἀπεδήμησας: in the Phaedrus, 230 C, Socrates appears to be entirely ignorant of the suburbs of his own city, and when Phaedrus chides him with this, saying, ουτως ἐκ τοῦ ἄστεως οὖτ' εἰς τὴν ὑπερορίαν ἀποδημείς ουτ' έξω τείχους έμοιγε δοκείς τὸ παράπαν έξιέναι, Socrates replies, συγγίγνωσκέ μοι, & ἄριστε, φιλομαθής γάρ είμι τὰ μὲν οὖν χωρία καὶ τὰ δένδρα οὐδέν μ' ἐθέλει διδάσκειν, οἱ δ' ἐν τω άστει άνθρωποι. 49. δήλον ότι, evidently, lit. 'it is clear that.' These words particularly emphasize καὶ ἡμεῖς οί νόμοι, since it is the laws that are chiefly in question. (App. III.) 51. ¿àv ήμιν γε πείθη, yes, if you will obey us. XV. If now you violate your covenant with us, and leave the city, wherever you go you will be an object of reproach and ridicule.

1. ταῦτα παραβάς καὶ ἐξαμαρτάνων τι τούτων: ταῦτα and τί are cognate acc. after the participles. The aorist refers to the one act of violating his covenant in breaking jail, the present to the continuing false position he will be in ever after. 6. πρῶτον μέν finds its adversative in άλλά, l. 23. Cities near and more remote are contrasted.

NOTES ON THE PHAEDO

The circumstances under which this dialogue took place are explained in Int. 37.

Title,  $\Phi AI\Delta\Omega N$ . See on the sub-title to the Crito, p. 150.

Of the dialogi personae observe that Apollodorus does not speak anywhere in the dialogue, and Simmias and Cebes do not in the chapters here given.

This Dialogue differs from the Crito in that the conversation is not given directly, but is narrated. An excuse for so reporting it is given by the fact that Plato, owing to illness (II. 46), was not present, and an advantage is that in this form many details are given which in a direct conversation cannot be naturally introduced, but which a reader needs to know.

The first three chapters are part of the dramatic prologue.

Mevégevos is the same whose name is given to one of the Dialogues of Plato. Ctesippus was 46. Πλάτων δέ, οίμαι, his cousin. ήσθένει. Plato must surely have known whether he was ill or not, so, Wohlrab suggests, the oluai indicates that his being ill and absent is merely a fiction to account for the fact that he says nothing. He could not well play the part of a dumb listener, but he does not introduce himself as speaking in any Dialogue. Others, taking ήσθένει seriously, think that it is implied that the trial and imprisonment of his master had made Plato ill. 48.  $\Sigma_{\mu\mu}$  (as . . .  $K\epsilon\beta\eta$ s were both young. They take important parts in the conversation which follows. In the Crito (IV. 21-24) they are represented as ready to use their property for the benefit of their master, 49. He evidently wishes to represent only the philosopher in his intercourse with his disciples, and to avoid all outbreaks of feeling. So Socrates rebukes Apollodorus (LXVI, 34) for driving the other disciples to tears by his weeping and loud lamentation. Xanthippe returns for a final farewell, in LXV. 10. 31. τινές . . . To meet death gladly, and in support of this opinion the whole argument which evolved.

After showing why the true philosopher will meet death gladly, in reply to a question from Cebes (XIV.) Socrates gives several reasons for his belief in a future existence. Simmias and Cebes raise objections (XXXVI.) which Socrates refutes in several arguments, and closes (LVIII.) with a myth containing a theory of the life after death and the happy fate in it of the good, especially philosophers.

The last four chapters are dramatically the Epilogue.

Another more probable explanation of the whole passage is that Crito had actually offered surety to the court that Socrates would appear at the appointed time. 34. προτίθεται: it is here suggested that Crito, who had been so thoughtful a friend of Socrates while he lived, would also perform for him the last offices. 37. εἰ αὐτὸ τοῦτο: an incorrect expression is an offense in itself. - κακόν τι: it may, for instance, lead us to think that the body is all that exists of a man. 39. τουμον σώμα is emphatically opposed to Σωκράτη, 1. 35. — The first θάπτειν depends on φάναι, but the second is better taken

APPENDIX

Various readings of the text are found in many passages in the different editions of Plato. These variations arise from differences in the manuscripts, and from the conjectures and emendations of different editors. This appendix contains a brief account of the manuscripts, a list of some of the notable editions, and of some of the more important variations in the text of the Apology, the Crito, and the Phaedo, together with some of the more important authorities for each variation.

I. THE MANUSCRIPTS OF PLATO

The manuscripts of Plato, of which there are many in existence, are all based on the arrangement of the Dialogues made by Thrasyllus (Int. 3) into nine tetralogies, and so, for their source, do not go back of the first century after Christ. Any other arrangements which may previously have existed were driven out by this one. The archetype of these manuscripts probably consisted of two volumes, of which the first contained tetralogies I.-VII.; the second, tetralogies VIII. and IX., the Definitions, and the spurious Dialogues. (Martin Schanz, Studien zur Geschichte des Platonischen Textes, 1874, pp. 11-20.)

The best manuscript we have, the Codex Clarkianus or Bodleianus (referred to by Schanz by the letter B; by Wohlrab, after Bekker and Stallbaum, by the letter U), contains only tetralogies I.–VI., and is, for them, the highest authority. It is named after Edward Daniel Clarke, who discovered it in 1801 in a monastery on the island of Patmos. It is also called Oxoniensis and Bodleianus, from being in the Bodleian library at Oxford. It was written on parchment in a most exquisite character, in 895 A.D., by the scribe John, for Arethas deacon of Patras, who afterward became archbishop of Caesarea. (Martin Schanz, Novae Commentationes Platonicae, 1871, pp. 105–118.)

The Codex Venetus (referred to by Schanz by the letter T; by Wohlrab, after Bekker and Stallbaum, by t), now in the Library of St. Mark's at Venice, contains the seven tetralogies of Book I. of the archetype, and so is especially valuable in the seventh tetralogy which is lacking in Codex Clarkianus. The oldest portion of this manuscript dates from the twelfth century, or earlier according to Schanz; the later portions from the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

For the literature on the manuscripts of Plato, their history, and their classification in the first six tetralogies, see Wohlrab's article: Die Platonhandschriften und ihre gegenseitige Beziehungen, in Fleckeisen's Jahrbücher, Fünfzehnter Supplementband, 1887.

II. EDITIONS OF PLATO'S WORKS

- 1. The editions of the complete works, which mark the progress of the critical study of Plato, are as follows:
- a. Platonis Opera quae extant omnia, John Serranus, 3 folio vols., Paris, 1578. What was most valuable in this edition was the work of the printer and scholar, Henricus Stephanus (Henri Estienne). The excellence of this edition made it for a long time the vulgate. Its pages and page divisions, (a) b, c, d, e, are noted in the margin of modern editions, and are the accepted standard of reference.
- b. Platonis Dialogi (Gr. et Lat.), Immanuel Bekker, 8 vols., Berlin, 1816-23. This editor, by his systematic collation of manuscripts, laid the foundation for the present critical study of the text of Plato. His work was especially important as demonstrating that, in establishing that text, there was little need of conjecture.
- c. Platonis Opera Omnia, Gottfried Stallbaum, 10 vols., Teubner, Leipzig, 1835-, is the best complete edition with exegetical commentary.
- d. Platonis Opera quae feruntur omnia, Martin Schanz, Tauchnitz, Leipzig, 1875–87. This contains the most full and exact critical apparatus.
- e. Platonis Dialogi, Martin Wohlrab after C. F. Hermann, 6 vols.. Teubner, Leipzig (Vol. I., 1886), is a convenient text edition with a brief critical commentary.
  - 2. Important editions of the Apology and Crito and of the Phaedo.
- a. Platonis Apologia Socratis et Crito, Martin Wohlrab, 1877, being Vol. I. Sect. 1 of Stallbaum's complete Plato referred to above in c.
  - b. The Apology of Plato, James Riddell, Oxford. 1867.
- c. Platons Verteidigungsrede des Sokrates und Kriton, Christian Cron, 8th edition, Teubner, Leipzig, 1882.

- d. Apologia (1893) and Krito (1888), being the third and second volumes in Sammlung ausgewählter Dialoge Platos, Martin Schanz, Tauchnitz, Leipzig.
- e. Verteidigungsrede des Sokrates und Kriton, Christian Cron, bearbeitet von Heinrich Uhle, Teubner, Leipzig. 1895.
- f. The Phaedo of Plato, R. D. Archer-Hind, Cambridge, England, 1883.
- g. Platons Phaidon. Martin Wohlrab, Teubner, Leipzig, 1895, being part 6 of Platons ausgewählte Schriften für den Schulgebrauch erklärt.

III. CRITICAL COMMENTARY

The first reading given is that which is adopted in this edition, and is generally that of Wohlrab in his revision of the text of Hermann (see above, II. I, e). Whenever Wohlrab's reading is departed from (except in the matter of punctuation, in regard to which see Preface), it is given and referred to by the letter W. B refers to the Codex Bodleianus; T to the Codex Venetus; S to the critical edition of Schanz (II. I, d); SA and SC respectively to the separate editions by Schanz of the Apology and Crito referred to above (II. 2, d); C to Cron's eighth edition of the Apology and Crito (II. 2, c); CU to Uhle's recension of Cron (II. 2, e); A-H to Archer-Hind's Phaedo (II. 2, f); and Bem. to Cron's Kritische und exegetische Bemerkungen zu Platons Apologie, etc., Fleckeisen's Jahrbücher, Fünfter Supplementband.

APOLOGY

άπολογία σωκράτους · ήθικός Β, but ήθικός seems added by a later hand.

- 17 A. I. I (and throughout this book). ὅτι as also S and CU ὅτι W and SA. Cron in Bem. argues that ὅτι should be the form always, leaving it to the reader to determine in each case whether it means 'what' or 'that.' For the history of the usage see Kühner-Blass, Grammatik der Gr. Sprache, § 93.
- 17 A, I. 7. χρή. B has χρῆν, which SA quotes Rieckher as saying could only have been used at the end of the trial if there had been acquittal. With χρῆν we should have expected the optative ἐξαπατηθεῖτε instead of the subjunctive.
- 17 B, I. 15. οὖν B followed by S, SA, C, and CU γοῦν B (the later hand) and inferior manuscripts.

- 17 C, I. 21. α λέγω S αν λέγω SA "in order to retain the reference to the future," but it refers to the present also.
- 17 D, I. 32. έβδομήκοντα B—πλείω έβδομήκοντα Hermann and Riddell. Wohlrab (II. 2, a) quotes from Stallbaum: ad vim oratoriam πλείω utique requiri videbatur, but adds: At Socrates non erat orator.
- 18 A, II. 3. ψευδη S and SA bracket as unnecessary.
- 18 B, II. 11. ἐμοῦ οὐδὲν ἀληθές SA ἐμοῦ μᾶλλον οὐδὲν ἀληθές B ἐμοῦ μὰ τόν οὐδὲν ἀληθές S ἐμοῦ Hermann. The conjecture of Schanz, which is an attempt to keep near to the best tradition, he himself gives up in SA.
- 18 B, II. 12. φροντιστής SA brackets on the ground that it separates two closely connected ideas, μετέωρα and τὰ ὑπὸ γῆς, and suggests that it was interpolated under the influence of the Clouds of Aristophanes, "in which the word φροντιστής, which perhaps was first coined by Aristophanes, is used to characterize Socrates."
- 18 D, II. 24. κωμφδιοποιός with B and S κωμφδοποιός SA as being the true Attic form.
- 18 D, II. 27. πάντες S, SA, and CU πάντων W.
- 19, C. III. 15. ἐστιν · μή . . . ὑπὸ Μελήτου . . . φύγοιμι · S brackets μή . . . φύγοιμι · ἐστιν · μή · ὑπὸ Μελήτων . . . φύγοιμι · SA and CU as, in their view, at last giving a satisfactory sense to the expression.
- 19 C, III. 18. αὐτοὺς ὑμῶν τοὺς πολλούς S and CU with B = αὐτῶν ὑμῶν πολλούς SA.
- 19 D, IV. 1. οὐδέν ἐστιν SA and CU οὐδέν (ἐστιν) S. Perhaps οὐδὲν ἔστιν should be read.
- 19 E, IV. 8. οδός τ' ἐστίν S brackets but SA reinstates, following it with a colon and supplying παιδεύειν ἀνθρώπους, so that ἰὼν κτλ. follows as explanatory without connective, and there is no anacoluthon.
- 20 A, IV. 13. Πάριος SA brackets as anticipating the question  $\pi$ οδα $\pi$ ός of l. 28.
- 20 A, IV. 20. καλώ τε καὶ ἀγαθώ S with B καλώ τε κάγαθώ SA and CU.
- 20 B, IV. 31. ἔχοι SA with B ἔχει W and S. διδάσκει S and CU with B διδάσκοι SA. See Bem., p. 86.
- 20 E, V. 27. Ιστε που S and CU ήστέ που SA.

- 20 E. V. 27. ἐμός τε ἐταῖρος ἦν ἐταῖρός τε καί CU with tradition ἐμός τε ἐταῖρος ἦν S. SA has ἐμὸς ἐταῖρός τε ἦν, and brackets ἔταῖρός τε καί as an interpolation which disturbs the sense.
- 21 C. VI. 16. καὶ διαλεγόμενος αὐτῷ S and SA bracket as a gloss on διασκοπῶν τοῦτον. But see Bem., p. 89.
- 21 E. VII. 2. καί before λυπούμενος S and SA bracket with Cobet, thus rendering the construction more difficult and losing the fine gradation.
- 22 A. VII. 13. ἵνα μοι ἵνα μή μοι Stephanus, Madwig, S, and SA, which spoils the author's meaning, which is that the oracle is true and must prove to be so. The ironical tone is already present in ὧσπερ πόνους τινὰς πονοῦντος.
- 22 A. VII. 13. Hermann's conjecture κἂν ἐλεγκτός, like the preceding, misses the author's thought.
- 22 C. VII. 34. τῷ αὐτῷ C and CU τὸ αὐτό B τῷ αὐτῷ αὐτῶν S and SA with Bekker following inferior manuscripts. Schanz says that the sharp contrast with καὶ τῶν πολιτικῶν makes the αὐτῶν necessary.
- 23 A. IX. 10. τοῦτ' οὐ F. A. Wolf, Riddell, S, SA, and CU τοῦτο inferior manuscripts and Stallbaum, whom Cron approves in Bem., p. 90 τοῦτον Β.
- 23 B, IX. 12. εὶ εἴποι Stephanus, S, SA, C, and CU εἴποι B.
- 23 C, X. 9. αύτοις B and T followed by S, SA, C, CU, and Riddell αὐτοις W with Hermann and inferior manuscripts.
- 23 D, X. 12. ἀγνοοῦσιν C and CU ἀποροῦσιν Ast ἀμφιγνοοῦσιν S and SA with the mistaken idea that ἔχουσιν οὐδὲν εἰπεῖν means the same as ἀγνοοῦσιν, whereas it expresses the result of their not knowing, so ἀλλά is quite right.
- 23 E, X. 20. ξυντεταγμένως B followed by C, Bem., p. 92 ξυντεταμένως S, SA, and CU with Hermann following inferior manuscripts.
- 23 E, X. 25. και τών πολιτικών C, Bem., p. 92 [καὶ τών πολιτικών] S, SA (where the argument for striking out these words is well presented), and CU.
- 24 A, X. 32. τοῖς αὐτοῖς. SA adds τούτοις, which gives explicitness but is not necessary.
- 25 A, XII. 23. οἱ ἐκκλησιασταί S brackets with Hirschig and Cobet, but SA again inserts. Bem., p. 93.

- 25 C, XIII. 1.  $\vec{\omega}$  πρὸς Διός, Μέλητε CU  $\vec{\omega}$  πρὸς Διὸς Μέλητε W, S, and C.
- 25 C, XIII. 2. πότερόν ἐστιν B and CU πότερον ἔστιν S, W, and C with Bekker.
- 25 C, XIII. 3.  $\mathring{\omega}$   $\tau \acute{\alpha} \nu$  S, SA, and CU  $-\mathring{\omega}$   $\tau \grave{\alpha} \nu$  B  $-\mathring{\omega} \tau \alpha \nu$  C  $-\mathring{\omega}$   $\tau \^{\alpha} \nu$  T and W. See Kühner-Blass, Grammatik der Gr. Sprache, § 141.
- 25 E, XIII. 20. ἀπ' αὐτοῦ B, S, C, and CU ὑπ' αὐτοῦ SA following T, but source, and not necessarily agency, is all that is implied.
- 26 A, XIII. 23. ἢ εἰ διαφθείρω, ἄκων C and CU ἢ διαφθείρω ἄκων S and SA following Stephanus.
- 26 A, XIII. 25. καὶ ἀκουσίων S and SA bracket. Cron (Bem., p. 94) explains ἀκουσίων as a 'pure rhetorical pleonasm,' to make distinct to the ear that which without it is perfectly clear to the understanding. The καί, he says, is not redundant as often with πολύς (e.g. 22 C, πολλὰ καὶ καλά), because ἀκουσίων adds nothing, being exactly identical with τοιούτων.
- 26 A, XIII. 28. o C ov S, SA, and CU  $\delta$  . . .  $\pi$ oi $\hat{\omega}$ ,  $\pi$ oi $\hat{\omega}$ v Heindorf.
- 26 D, XIV. 24. S and SA bracket 'Αναξαγόρου, and would supply ἐμοῦ from the context as better suiting οἴει κατηγορεῖν. With 'Αναξαγόρου, S argues, we should have κατηγορεῖς.
- 26 E, XIV. 33. δοκῶ S brackets, and instead of νομίζων reads νομίζω with B. SA restoring νομίζων conjectures that perhaps σοὶ δοκεῖν . νομίζω is the true reading.
- 27 E, XV. 35. [η] καὶ ὅνων, τοὺς ημιόνους with S, SA, and CU η (καὶ) ὅνων [τοὺς ἡμιόνους] C and W. See Bem., p. 95.
- 27 E, XV. 37. S and SA bracket ταῦτα on the ground that it is a gloss added to explain ἀποπειρώμενος. W, with Hermann, brackets τὴν γραφὴν ταυτήν.
- 27 E, XV. 40. où with the best manuscripts [où] C. Bem., p. 96. SA inserts after καὶ αὖ: μήτε δαιμόνια μήτε θεῖα καὶ δαίμονας καὶ θεοὺς καὶ αὖ, and brackets the second τοῦ αὐτοῦ.
- 27 E, XV. 42. μήτε ήρωας is bracketed by S and SA.
- 28 A, XVI. 9. και άλλους C and CU καλούς S καὶ άλλους άγαθούς.
- 28 C, XVI. 25. ω παι T and in margin of B. S and SA omit.
- 29 B, XVII. 23. τούτω SA brackets as a gloss to ἐνταῦθα.

- 30, D, XVIII. 15. ἀποκτεινύναι. This is the correct form. See Meyer, Griechische Grammatik, § 494.—ἀποκτιννύναι W and others. So also in Crito, VIII. 25, IX. 8, and Phaedo, I. 32.
- 30 E, XVIII. 22. ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ S, SA, and C bracket. Bem., p. 99. CU retains these words.
- 31 B, XVIII. 44.  $\epsilon \ell \chi o \nu$  B, SA, C, and CU  $\epsilon \ell \chi \epsilon \nu$  S with Wex. Bem., p. 101.
- 31 C, XIX. 3. πολυπραγμονῶ C and CU with better manuscripts. πολυπραγμονῶν S and SA.
- 31 D, XIX. 9. After ἀρξάμενον S and SA have a comma which hinders the proper connection, τοῦτ' ἔστιν . . . . φωνή τις.
- 32 A, XIX. 21. μαχούμενον S, C, and CU μαχόμενον SA.
- 32 A, XX. 5. ἄμα κάν Riddell, SA, and CU ἄμα καὶ ἄμ' ἄν B. ἄμα C and S ἄμ' ἀν καί W.
- 32 B, XX. 9. ['Αντιοχίs] S, SA, and CU. W retains. C retains but discredits. Bem., p. 104.
- 32 B, XX. 13. ἠναντιώθην C, CU, S, and SA with B—ἠναντιώθην ὑμῖν W. Bem., p. 104. The object of the verb is contained in ποιεῖν.
- 32 B, XX. 14. καὶ ἐναντία ἐψηφισάμην S, SA, and C bracket. CU retains. Bem., p. 105.
- 33 A, XXI. 13. ἐπιθυμοῖ SA and CU ἐπιθυμεῖ C, S, and W.
- 33 D, XXII. 20. καὶ τιμωρεῖσθαι C, CU, and Riddell with the better manuscripts. S and W bracket. SA omits entirely. The two infinitives are equivalent to μνησικακεῦν. By retaining these words at the end of the sentence the idea of taking vengeance is emphasized.
- 34 E, XXIII. 29. το Σωκράτη SA, C, CU, and manuscripts. B has τŵ Σωκράτει with interlinear correction. S has the dative, which Riddell also contends for.
- 35 B, XXIII. 43. vhâs Riddell and C with B  $\eta\mu$ âs W, SA, and CU.
- 35 D, XXIV. 12.  $\pi\acute{a}\nu \tau \omega s$  C, CU, and Riddell  $[\pi\acute{a}\nu \tau \omega s]$  W, S, and SA.
- 36 A, XXV. 8. τριάκοντα B and other manuscripts, with which modern editors all agree. Bem., p. 108.
- 36 A, XXV. 9. ἀπεπεφεύγη SA and CU ἀποπεφεύγη B, S, C, W, and Riddell.

- 36 B, XXVI. 4. ἀποτεῖσαι. This form is determined by inscriptions. See Meisterhans, Grammatik der Attischen Inschriften, p. 144. ἀποτῖσαι W and others.
- 36 B, XXVI. 5. οἱ πολλοὶ οἱ πολλοὶ οὖ SA, on the ground that to supply ἐπιμελοῦνται would be extraordinary.
- 36 C, XXVI. 12. ἰών C and CU [ἰών] S and SA.
- 37 C, XXVII. 20. τοῖς ἔνδεκα S brackets but SA retains. CU says that these words are perhaps a foreign addition, and that ἡ ἀεὶ καθισταμένη ἀρχή is better understood of the frequent changes which in later years the government had undergone.
- 37, C, XXVII. 21, 23. ἐκτείσω as determined by inscriptions. See Meisterhans, Grammatik der Attischen Inschriften, p. 144 ἐκτίσω W and others. So also ἐκτείσεω, XXVIII. 17 instead of ἐκτίσεω in W, and ἐκτείσαι, XXVIII. 19 and 20 instead of ἐκτίσαι in W.
- 37 D, XXVII. 28. και τοὺς λόγους SA brackets because the feminine follows.
- 39 B, XXIX. 39. ὄφλων B, T, S, and C ὄφλών SA and CU with Cobet. Thus accented this form is to be regarded as a present See Kühner-Blass, Grammatik der Gr. Sprache, § 141, but compare Goodwin's Greek Grammar, p. 395.
- 39 C, XXX. 8. εἴργασθε οἰόμενοι εἰργάσασθε οἰόμενοι μέν SA, CU with Hermann on the ground of traces of erasure in B εἰργάσασθέ με οἰόμενοι S.
- 41 B, XXXII. 39. ἀηδές S, C with B ἀηδής W, SA, and CU with T.

CRITO

- 43 D, I. 39. [τῶν ἀγγέλων] S, SA, C, and CU τῶν ἀγγελιῶν W. Bem., p. 115.
- 44 B, II. 18. ἄτοπον B and S ώς ἄτοπον SC and CU.
- 44 B, III. 4. τοῦ ἐστερῆσθαι S, SC, and CU σοῦ ἐστερῆσθαι Hermann with B and other manuscripts. But the infinitive depending on a preposition must have the article.
- 44 B, III. 5. ἔτι δέ CU—ἔτι SC dropping δέ because there is no coördinate adversative. Madwig meets the difficulty at the other end by writing χωρὶς μὲν σοῦ ἐστερήσομαι—ἔτι δή S.
- 44 C, III. 15. ὅσπερ αν πραχθη ὅσπερ δη ἐπράχθη SC, but the subjv. is better, since the events referred to are still in the future.
- 44 D, III. 17. δηλα S, C, and CU δηλοί SC.

- 45 B, IV. 21. ξένοι οὖτοι with the manuscripts and C. Bem., p. 116 ξένοι (οὖτοι) S ξένοι αὖ τοι CU ξένοι τοι SC ξένοι ἔτι W. See Fleckeisen's Jahrb., 1877, p. 222.
- 45 B, IV. 25. S reads ἀποκυ $\hat{g}$ s, but SC has ἀποκάμης with B and other manuscripts.
- 47 A. VI. 37. οὐδὲ τῶν δ' οὕ; these words are not in B, but are added in the margin by an old hand. S and SC omit them.
- 47 C. VII. 23. διόλλυσι B as corrected, SC and CU διολλύει S and W.
- 48 B, VIII. 26. KP. Δῆλα δὴ καὶ ταῦτα. W following Buttmann gives these words to Socrates. S and SC bracket φαίη γὰρ ἄν, and give the following ἀληθῆ λέγεις to Crito.
- 48 E, IX. 26. πείσας σε S, SC, and CU πείσαί σε the manuscripts.
- 50 B, XI. 22. ἢδίκει S, C, and CU ἀδικεῖ SC with Heindorf.
- 51 A. XII. 36.  $\mathring{\eta}$  with the manuscripts  $-\mathring{\mathring{\eta}}$  SC and CU. Schanz suggests that in B the first hand may have written  $\mathring{\eta}$ .
- 51 B, XII. 42. η πείθειν SC brackets.
- 51 D, XIII. 13. ἀρέσκοιμεν C and CU with B ἀρέσκομεν S and SC with Madwig.
- 51 E, XIII. 22. πείθεσθαι C and CU with B—πείσεσθαι S and SC with Buttmann.
- 52 B, XIV. 13. [ὅ τι μὴ ὅπαξ εἰς Ἰσθμόν] is not in the text of B, but is supplied by a later hand in the margin. S and SC omit the words entirely. Bem., p. 121.
- 53 A, XIV. 49. δηλον νόμων S and SC bracket.
- 53 C, XV. 20.  $\mathring{\eta}$  S and SC  $-\mathring{\eta}$  B.
- 53 C, XV. 22. ἄσχημον ᾶν φανεῖσθαι S and CU with B ἄσχημον φανεῖσθαι SC.
- 53 E, XV. 33. αΙσχρῶs S with B (with γλι by a later hand in margin) γλισχρῶs CU and SC.
- 53 E, XV. 38. ἐν Θετταλία S brackets, but SC reinserts and gives examples of similar repetition.
- 54 A, XV. 44. τοῦτο ἀπολαύσωσιν. B has σου in the margin, which adds to the sharpness of the reproach.
- 54 A, XV. 47. SC brackets ἐπιμελήσονται αὐτῶν as superfluous.— [ἐπιμελήσονται] S.
- 54 B, XVI. 1. πειθόμενος ήμεν. After these words Meiser would introduce τοις σοις γεννηταίς, referring to XIII. 21.

KITCHEL'S PLATO - 12

PHAEDO

- φαίδων η περί ψυχης ήθικός B, but  $\dot{\eta}\theta$ ικός seems added by a later hand.
- 57 A, I. 7. Φλειασίων. This form of the word is determined by inscriptions. See Meisterhans, Grammatik der Att. Inschriften, p. 41 Φλιασίων W with others.
- 58 B, I. 33. Δηλόν τε S and A-H after Bekker  $\Delta \hat{\eta} \lambda$ ον B.
- 58 C, II. 2. τί. B has τίνα, but as a correction in the space which would be filled with τί.
- 58 E, II. 21. ἀνήρ S and A-H after Bekker ἀνήρ B.
- 59 B, II. 43. [Κρίτων]. S and A-H omit the word. It is in B, but in a later hand.
- 59 D, III. 12. ἡμέρα [ἡμέρα] S and A-H after Hermann as spurious.
- 60 B, III. 37. το . . . μη ἐθέλειν B followed by S and A-H τ $\hat{\varphi}$  . . μη ἐθέλειν W.
- 60 C, III. 47. [πρότερον]. S omits the word which is added in the margin of B.
- 116 B, LXV. 11. ἐκείναις ἐναντίον ἐναντίον ἐκείναι Β. S and A-H bracket ἐκείναι.
- 116 C, LXV. 27. ἀγγέλλων A-H with B ἀγγελῶν S after Bekker.
- 116 D, LXV. 46. S brackets εἰκότως as spurious.
- 117 B, LXVI. 14. πώματος S and A-H after Stallbaum πόματος B.
- 118 A, LXVI. 48. πηγυῦτο S πήγνυτο Β.

A Grammar of Attic and Ionic Greek

By FRANK COLE BABBITT, Ph.D. (Harvard)

Professor of the Greek Language and Literature, Trinity College, Hartford; formerly Fellow of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens.

PRICE, $1.50

THIS grammar states the essential facts and principles of the Greek language in concise form, with only so much discussion as may reasonably be demanded for a clear understanding of the subject. It therefore meets the wants of secondary schools and at the same time is sufficient for all ordinary demands of the college course.

A Modern Grammar.—The book incorporates the results of the more recent philological studies, and includes many departures from conventional presentation. Due regard is paid to the fact that analogy plays an important part in language, and that the context is often more important than grammatical rules in determining the exact significance of mode or tense.

Treatment of Cases.—The treatment of cases is thoroughly logical and clear. The true genitive and the ablative genitive are distinguished from each other and considered separately; likewise the true dative, the locative dative, and the experimental dative. In this way much confusion is avoided.

Rules of Agreement.—The general rules of agreement are first given in a preliminary paragraph and are then followed by a general statement regarding attraction and constructio ad sensum, and its application to substantives, adjectives, verbs, etc.

Treatment of Modes.—The general significance of each mode is summarized briefly at the beginning, with its uses grouped and treated under the head of statements, questions, wishes, commands, etc. The various forms of statement are taken up and contrasted, thus allowing the student to perceive at a glance their similarities and differences.

Classes of Verbs.—While every portion of grammar has been simplified as much as possible, the notice of teachers is directed especially to the fact that the verbs have been reduced to five classes. In spite of this, however, nothing has been sacrificed in the process.

Indirect Discourse.—The subject of indirect discourse is put at the end of syntax, and the principles have been fully stated in their proper places. The general principles are clearly enunciated, followed by the details with numerous examples.

Syntactical Usage.—Tables of syntactical usage for reference are included to make it possible for the pupil to perceive the normal usage at a glance.
